The duty of an apothecary is to prepare the medicine directed by the prescriptions of physicians; & in 55 Geo. 3, c. 194, s. 5, it is recited that "it is the duty of every person using or exercising the art & mystery of an apothecary, to prepare with exactness, & to dispense such medicines as may be directed for the sick by any physician lawfully licenced" (LORD TENTERDEN, C.J.).—THOMPSON v. LEWIS (1828), 3 C. & P. 483; Mood. & M. 255, N. I apprehend that an apothecary is a person who professes to judge of internal disease by its symptoms, & applies himself to cure that disease by medicines. . . . The mere fact of deft.'s having supplied medicines, does not necessarily show that he practised as an apothecary; for a surgeon may lawfully do that, if the medicines are administered in the cure of a surgical case. . . . In an action against him by pltf. to recover the penalty of £20 under Apothecaries Act, 1815 (c. 194), s. 20, for having acted or practised as an apothecary without having a certificate, the county ct. judge decided in favour of deft., on the ground that what he had done amounted to acting, not as an apothecary, but as a surgeon in a minor surgical case:—Held: the question was one of fact for the county ct. judge, & as he had arrived at the conclusion that deft. had not acted or practised as an apothecary, the appeal from his decision must be dismissed.—APOTHECARIES SOCIETY v. GREGORY (1908), 25 T. ness of members, the wages & conditions of employment between master & employee members of the society, the prices at which members might sell their goods, & the expenditure of the funds of the society in the formation of an industrial council committee for, amongst others, the above-named objects, all of which would in effect convert the society into a trade union, a result which could not have been contemplated in 1843 when the charter was granted, & the insurance of members generally against insurable risks, were not within the powers or purposes of the society, & pltf., a registered member of the society, was entitled to an injunction to restrain the society from committing such acts.

Above Act, sect. 1 confirmed the charter, & sect. 2, which authorised the council to make bye-laws for the purposes contemplated by the charter or the Act, recognised that the only purposes of the society were those which were contemplated either by the charter or by the Act; & I am of opinion that this amounts to a statutory limitation of the objects of the society (PETERSON, J.). —JENKIN v. PHARMACEUTICAL SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN, [1921] 1 Ch. 392; 90 L. 190. —— To declare poisons—Under Pharmacy Act, 1868 (c. 121).]—Applt., a registered chemist, was convicted of selling veratrine, a poison, without having complied with the provisions of above Act, sect. 17, applicable to the sale of poisons within Sched. A., Part 1, to the Act. Veratrine is a poisonous vegetable alkaloid, & therefore a poison within Sched. A., Part 1. The veratrine in question formed one of the ingredients of an ointment sold by applt. for the destruction of vermin. In 1869 the Pharmaceutical Society in pursuance of above Act, sect. 2, declared by resolution that every compound containing any poison within the Act, when sold for the destruction of vermin, should be deemed a poison within the Act, but did not place these compounds in Sched. A., Part 1:—Held: the Pharmaceutical Society had power to declare that a compound containing as one of its ingredients a poison mentioned in Sched. A., Part 1, ought to be deemed a poison within Sched. A., Part 2; the article sold by applt. was a poison within Sched. A., Part 2, & the conviction was, therefore, wrong.—BROWN v. LEGGETT, [1906] 1 K. B. 330; 75 L. J. K. B. 193; 94 L. T. 200; 70 J. P. 109; 54 W. R. 362; 22 T. L. R. 180; 50 Sol. Jo. 141; 21 Cox, C. 202. Right to registration — Pupil at time of passing of the Act—Whether absolute right.]—A person who has been articled as a pupil, & has paid a premium to a dental practitioner entitled to be registered under Dentists Act, 1878 (c. 33), in consideration of receiving from such practitioner a complete dental education, has not, although his articles expired before Jan. 1, 1880, an absolute right to registration under the Act, unless he has made the declaration required under sect. 7, in the case of persons engaged in the practice of dentistry at the date of the passing of the Act, at least in a case where there was time for registering him after the expiration of his articles, & before Jan. 1, 1880.—R. v. MEDICAL COUNCIL, [1897] 2 Q. 203. Erasure of name from—A judicial power of General Medical Council—Only exercisable when case within Dentists Act, 1878 (c. 33), ss. 12, 13.]—Where a person has been registered under above Act as a licentiate of a medical authority, the fact that his diploma has since been revoked by such medical authority does not render him liable to be erased from the dentists' register under above Act.

The power of erasure by the council is in the nature of a judicial power, & must be confined to the matters into which they are authorised to inquire for the purpose of exercising such power. . . . . The mere fact that a medical authority has struck a person's name off their register of licentiate does not authorise the erasure of his name by the general council from the register under above Act in the absence of any exercise by the council of the judicial powers given to them by above Act, sect. 13 (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

I think that the true construction of above Act is, that, when a person's name is once placed on the register, it cannot be removed, unless the case is brought within above sects., or that it cannot be removed merely because the person has lost the qualification in respect of which he was originally entitled to be registered (LOPES, L.J.).—Ex p. PARTRIDGE (1887), 19 Q. In the forecourt was a gas lamp on which was written "Mr. C. R. Stent, Surgeon-Dentist." There was a further notice outside the premises "Messrs. At the foot of the document were the words "Please show this form to the dentist, as only the certificate of a registered dentist can be accepted." Applt. went to resp., who practised dentistry, but who was neither a registered dentist nor a legally qualified medical practitioner, in the belief that he was a registered dentist, & had his teeth examined. Applt. handed him the above document, telling him that he required a certificate by a registered dentist. Respondent read the document & said that he had given hundreds of such certificates to the Post Office, & that he would give applt. the certificate required, when he returned on a subsequent day to have his teeth finished. Applt. did not return & no such certificate was given. Resp. did not at any time in writing or orally use the words "dentist" or "registered dentist" or state that he was a person specially qualified to practise dentistry:—Held: resp. had taken or used a description implying that he was registered under Dentists Act, 1878 (c. 33), contrary to sect. 3 of that Act, & had therefore rendered himself liable to a penalty.—ROBERTSON v. HAWKINS, [1913] 1 K. When giving evidence in a county ct. he stated, in answer to a question put to him by the judge, that the was a dentist. In respect of this statement he was charged for that he did unlawfully "take or use the name or title of 'dentist,'" contrary to Dentists Act, 1878 (c. 33), s. 3. A person who was not registered under Dentists Act, 1878 (c. 33), operated as a dentist on a patient, & supplied him with false teeth & gold. He made a charge of £45, & the patient gave him two cheques for £20 and £25 respectively, the latter cheque being post-dated. The £20 cheque was duly paid, but the £25 cheque was dishonoured on presentation, the drawer having stopped the payment of it by his bankers.

The dentist brought an action in the county ct. against the patient on the £25 cheque. The judge found that £21 represented the price of the gold & other material supplied by pltf. Pltf. when being examined as a witness claimed to appropriate the £20 cheque to the payment of his professional fees. No appropriation had been made by the patient:—Held: pltf. was entitled to make the appropriation & to recover the £21 in the action.—SEYMOUR v. PICKETT, [1905] 1 K. B. 715; 74 L. J. K. An inquiry took place before the Board, & at the first meeting she gave evidence. At an adjourned meeting of which she had notice but at which she did not appear, the Board had before them a report by a relieving officer not verified by statutory declaration & of which no copy had been supplied to applt. as required by Rules of Procedure, 1911, r. 2. The Board decided that applt. had not told the truth & removed her name from the roll. a midwife, but included misconduct which in the opinion of the Board tended to unfit applt. for the discharge of the duties of a midwife; if the facts had justified the Board in coming to the conclusion at which they had arrived, they would have been entitled, if they thought fit, to remove applt.'s name from the roll; but (2) as the report of the relieving officer had been irregularly admitted, & as it was impossible to say that the Board was not influenced by the inaccurate statements in it, the order removing applt.'s name from the roll must be quashed. 227. Duty of Board at hearing—To act in judicial manner—Whether bound by legal rules of evidence.]—Owing to investigations made by an inspector acting for the local supervising authority over midwives, charges of misconduct were brought against applt., a certified midwife, that she had employed an uncertified person to act as her substitute contrary to the provision in Midwives Act, 1902 (c. 17), s. 1 (4), that no woman certified under the Act should employ an uncertified person as her substitute. At an inquiry held by the Central Midwives Board evidence was given by the inspector of admissions made to him by applt. that her husband, who was uncertified, had acted for her as her substitute in a certain case while she was engaged in another case, & of statements made to him by other patients of applts. who were not called before the Board. Applt. herself gave evidence denying the truth of the charges, but the Board, after deliberation, decided that misconduct was proved, & that applt.'s name should be removed from the roll. On appeal to the Div. Ct. objection was taken on behalf of applt. that the evidence before the Board was all hearsay evidence, & was therefore inadmissible against applt.:—Held: (1) to constitute an "employment" of a substitute within sect. 1, sub-sect. 4 of the Act, it was not necessary that the substitute should be paid, & that the offence under that sub-sect. would be committed by employing an uncertified substitute, whether such substitute were paid or not; (2) the Board were acting as a judicial body & were entitled to act upon the best evidence they could get, & having before them evidence of misconduct upon which they could properly act, & having upon that evidence come to the conclusion that misconduct was proved, the ct. would not interfere, but the ct. declined to lay down any general rules as to the conduct of such inquiries by the Board. Qu.: whether on such an inquiry the Board are bound by the legal rules of evidence.—Re FELDMANN (1907), 97 L. 230. —— —— Evidence by statutory declaration.]—A midwife was charged before the Central Midwives Board with having contravened certain of their rules. The charges were considered to be proved, but sentence was postponed. In the meantime the local supervising authority, appointed under Midwives Act, 1902 (c. 17), s. 8, were instructed to furnish reports at specified times on the future conduct of the accused. One of these reports was unsatisfactory, & the name of the accused was thereupon removed from the roll, but the report was not communicated to her. Part of the evidence before the Board consisted of a statutory declaration made by a former patient, who refused to appear as a witness. On appeal by the midwife further oral & other evidence was admitted:—Held: (1) the charges were abundantly proved & the decision of the Board must be affirmed; (2) the Board were entitled to arrive at their decision when the case was heard & to act upon it at a later date, as they had done after receiving the report; (3) the Central Midwives Board Rules, 1916, Sched. D, r. 5, providing for the verification by statutory declaration of statements relied on as part of the case against the accused person, applied to final hearings before the Board as well as to preliminary inquiries, & at the final hearing the Board might receive in evidence the statutory declaration of a person who refused to appear as a witness, provided that a copy had been supplied to the accused person.—DAVIES v. CENTRAL MIDWIVES' BOARD (1918), 88 L. Attending patient "under direction of" qualified medical practitioner—Midwives Act, 1902 (c. 17), s. 1 (2).]—A woman who had formerly been, but had ceased to be, certified under above Act, was engaged to attend at five cases of confinement, & in each case as soon as she was engaged a qualified medical practitioner was also retained. In each case the woman attended & delivered the patient. In none of the cases was the doctor present or sent for at or before the birth of the child, but in each case he paid a professional visit thereafter. In none of the cases did the doctor make any professional inquiry or give any instructions. There was no emergency, but, if there had been, there was opportunity for summoning the doctors. In the opinion of the doctors the woman was capable & trustworthy, & no instructions to her were necessary in any of the cases:—Held: in these cases the woman had not attended the patients "under the direction" of a qualified medical practitioner within above sub-sect. of above Act, & she was liable to be convicted under that sub-sect.—DAVIS v. MORRIS, [1923] 2 K. 246. "Held out or recommended to public"—Necessity for notice or advertisement to be affixed.]—By the Medicines Stamp Act, 1812 (c. 150), s. 2, a penalty is imposed on any person who shall utter, vend, or expose to sale, any packet, etc., containing any of the drugs, etc., mentioned in the schedule, without a paper cover, duly stamped, denoting the duty charged.

The schedule includes all powders, tinctures, etc., to be used or applied as medicines for the prevention, cure, or relief of any disorder or complaint, incident to or affecting the human body, which are, by any public notice or advertisement, or by any written papers or handbills, or by any label or words written or printed, affixed to or delivered with any packet, etc., containing the same, held out or recommended to the public by the makers, vendors, or proprietors, as nostrums or proprietary medicines, or as specifics, or as beneficial to the prevention, cure, or relief of any distemper, malady, ailment, disorder, or complaint, incident to or affecting the human body.

The special exemptions in the schedule include all medicinal drugs which shall be uttered or vended entire, without any mixture or composition with any other drug or ingredient, by any surgeon, apothecary, chemist, or druggist who has served a regular apprenticeship, or by any other person licenced.

Informations were preferred against resps., a limited co., for selling a powder & a tincture without stamps. Resps. issued a price list, which was distributed gratis, & described the medicines as beneficial for certain specified ailments, & the bottle of tincture was wrapped in a handbill describing it in terms similar to those in the price list:—Held: (1) by distributing the price list, resps. had held out or recommended the medicines to the public, by a public notice or advertisement, as beneficial for the cure of disorders, within the schedule; (2) it was not necessary that the notice or advertisement should be affixed to or delivered with the medicine; (3) the case did not come within the special exemptions, the stamp duty was payable, & the informations ought not to be dismissed.—SMITH v. MASON & Co., [1894] 2 Q. 248. —— —— By wholesale to retail dealer—Offer to supply advertising matter.]—Applts., wholesale chemists, issued a price list of drugs to retail chemists but not to the public generally. They sold to a person who produced an order purporting to come from a retail chemist, a bottle of tablets of a drug described & priced in their list which was not stamped for the duty chargeable under Medicines Act, 1812 (c. 150). The list contained a recommendation of their preparations & stated that medical literature & advertising matter would be supplied on application, & it described the use of the drug. The drug was mixed with starch & milk sugar, but the milk sugar did not affect the medicinal quality of the drug, & the starch had no medicinal effect:—Held: there was evidence that applts. had by advertisement or printed papers held out or recommended the drug to the public as beneficial for human ailments, & it was not "entire without any mixture or composition with any other drug or ingredient" within Medicines Stamp Act, 1812 (c. 150), sched.—KNOLL v. RENSHAW, [1916] 1 K. without being duly stamped. The justices dismissed the summons on the ground that in their opinion the said words did not in fact hold out or recommend to the public any nostrum, proprietary medicine or specific, or that the pastilles were beneficial for the prevention, cure, or relief of any distemper within the said Act:—Held: the said words were capable of only one meaning, namely, as amounting to a distinct statement that these pastilles were beneficial to a complaint affecting the human body, & the justices ought to have convicted.—RANSOM v. SANGUINETTI (1903), 67 J. P. 219, D. C.

251. —— —— "Brain & nerve food."]—Resp. sold a preparation known as "Antineurasthin," & described as a "brain & nerve food;" & in pamphlets published by him it was recommended as a nerve food for persons suffering from mental strain, & as a cure for nervous diseases, headaches, neuralgic pains, & other ailments. It was sold in boxes, each containing twenty-four tablets, & the usual dose was said to be three or four tablets a day, to be taken between meals. It was described by resp. as a natural food, & most of its ingredients were articles of food. Resp. was summoned for selling a box containing the preparation to be used as a medicine without a paper cover or wrapper provided & stamped by the Comrs. of Inland Revenue, as required by Medicines Stan p Act, 1812 (c. 150), s. 2, & the magistrate, being of opinion, on the facts proved, that the article was not a medicine within the Act, dismissed the summons:—Held: the article was sold as a medicine "for the prevention, cure, or relief of disorders & complaints incident to or affecting the human body," within the Act, & resp. was liable to a penalty for selling the same without having the box duly stamped.—HARDING v. MIGGE (1909), 101 L. T. 459; 73 J. P. 493, D. C.

252. "Owner . . . first vendor"—Recommendation affixed by retailer.]—A retail chemist who purchases a preparation of medicinal drugs from the manufacturers or from other persons, & himself attaches to the bottles in which he retails it a label recommending it as a remedy for certain specified human ailments, is not the "owner, proprietor . . . original or first vendor thereof," within Medicines Stamp Act, 1812 (c. 150), sched.; & if the preparation at the time that he so purchased it was exempt from stamp duty, the fact of his attaching the said label will not deprive it of the exemption.—FARMER v. GLYN-JONES, [1903] 2 K. 253. Surgeon, etc. "who has served apprenticeship"—Apprenticeship must be in writing.]—Medicines Stamp Act, 1812 (c. 150), s. 2, imposes a penalty upon any person vending or exposing to sale any packet, box, bottle, pot, phial, or other inclosure containing any of the drugs, preparations, or compositions set forth in the Schedule to the Act without a proper paper cover, wrapper, or label duly stamped with the duty charged thereon. The Schedule to the Act contains, so far as material, an exemption in the case of mixtures, compositions, or preparations which shall be vended by any surgeon, apothecary, chemist, or druggist "who hath served a regular apprenticeship":—Held: in order to constitute a "regular apprenticeship" within the above exemption there must be an apprenticeship under a contract in writing, & therefore the exemption does not apply where there has been service in fact as an apprentice under an oral contract.—KIRKBY v. TAYLOR, [1910] 1 K. 257. "Person"—Corporation—Effect of employment of qualified assistant.]—Whether the word "person" in a statute can be treated as including a corpn. must depend on a consideration of the object of the statute, & of the enactments passed with a view to carry that object into effect.

A small body of persons had obtained a registration under Cos. Acts, 1862–1867. One only of these persons was a qualified, certified, & registered chemist. His share in the co. was very small; he was the person who appeared in the shop & conducted the sales, & he received a salary for his labour in dispensing the drugs, which were sold for the profit of the co.:—Held: under these circumstances, the word "person" in Pharmacy Act, 1868 (c. 121), ss. 1, 15, did not apply so as to make this incorporated co. liable to a penalty; but the actual seller must be a qualified person.

A corpn. certainly cannot, under the provisions of Pharmacy Act, 1868 (c. 121), be a pharmaceutical chemist. Nor can it be a chemist & druggist within the meaning of this Act & be registered under this Act. . . . The act of selling, the act of compounding, & every other definite & particular act mentioned in sect. 1, & in the sects. by which penalties are imposed are struck at, whether the person who does them is a principal to whom the business belongs, or anyone whom he employs to carry on the business (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

260. "Seller"—Order' taken by canvasser.] Deft., a seedsman & florist at Worcester, acted as agent to receive orders for a limited co. at Liverpool who were the manufacturers of a preparation called "Weed Killer" which contained arsenic. Deft. took at his shop for transmission to the co., an order for "Weed Killer" & received on account of the co. the price of the quantity ordered, for which he gave a receipt on a bill headed with the name of the co. He subsequently transmitted the order to the co., who sent the "Weed Killer" ordered to the giver of the order direct. Deft. was in the habit of taking, & dealing with, orders for "Weed Killer" in the manner above described, & he received a commission from the co. in respect of orders so transmitted by him & executed by the co. In an action in the county ct. against deft., for a penalty for selling poison in contravention of Pharmacy Act, 1868 (c. 121), s. 15, the county ct. judge gave judgment for deft. on the ground that deft. was not the seller of the "Weed Killer" within the meaning of the sect. & he found as a fact that deft. was in the position merely of a canvasser for the co. with authority to receive money on their account:—Held: there being evidence to support the county ct. judge's finding of fact, the ct. was bound thereby, &, upon that finding deft. did not sell the "Weed Killer" within Pharmacy Act, 1868 (c. 121), s. 15—PHARMACEUTICAL SOCIETY v. WHITE, [1901] 1 K. 267. Poison in medicine dispensed—By registered chemist—Bonâ fide belief in authenticity of prescription.]—Applt., a duly registered chemist, was convicted under Pharmacy Act, 1868 (c. 121), s. 17, for selling poison to a person unknown to him. It was proved that J., who was unknown to applt. came into his shop & produced a prescription written in the abbreviated form usual among chemists. At the foot of it were the initials "R. M. L.," & the words "Mrs. Newton, Aug. 11, 1869." There was a legally qualified medical practitioner having the initials "R. M. L." Applt.'s assistant dispensed the prescription by putting a small quantity of prussic acid into a bottle & filling up the bottle with rose water, according to the meaning of the prescription. Applt. made an entry in his prescription book, "Newton, Mrs., copying the prescription, Aug. 11, R. M. L." He also indexed the entry by inserting the name "Newton" & the page in the index contained in the book. The bottle was labelled with the name & address of applt., but not with the word "poison." The prescription was one which might be ordered for a lotion. No evidence was given as to whether there was such a person as Mrs. Newton or not. Applt. was also convicted in respect of the same sale for selling poison in a bottle not labelled with the word "poison":—Held: (1) assuming that applt. bonâ fide believed that he was dispensing a prescription given by a medical man to Mrs. Newton, he could not be convicted for selling poison to a person unknown to him, but must be taken to have dispensed a medicine according to the requirements of the proviso to Pharmacy Act, 1868 (c. 121), s. 17; (2) he could not be twice convicted under the same sect. in respect of the same sale.—BERRY v. HENDERSON (1870), L. 1. Meaning of "London"—Used in contract.]—Pltf. alleged that deft., having agreed to convey her safely by his coach from London to Blackheath, neglected his duty, by throwing her down, etc. Deft.'s coach ran from Charing Cross to Blackheath, & pltf. got up at the Elephant & Castle; but deft. had inscribed on his coach "London to Blackheath": —Held: no variance.

The agreement here must be taken according to the intention of the parties, & by London, they meant, not the city, strictly speaking, but what is usually called London (BEST, C.J.).—DITCHAM v. CHIVIS (1828), 4 Bing. 706; 1 Moo. & P. 735; 6 L. J. O. S. C. P. 176; 130 E. R. 941.

3. ——— ———.]—By arts. of agreement between A., described as "of Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury-square, in the county of Middlesex," of the one part, & B., of etc., of the second part, the former agreed to instruct the latter in the business of a surgeon-dentist for a term of four years, & it was stipulated that B. should not, without the consent of A., carry on the business of surgeon-dentist "in London, or any of the towns or places in England or Scotland" where A., may have been practising before the expiration of the said term:—Held: in its strict & proper meaning, the word "London" meant the City of London, in which sense it ought to be understood, as there was nothing in the context to prevent its being construed in its proper sense; & a statement in the case, that "London" had a popular or colloquial sense, in which Great Russell street would be understood to be within its limits, was not sufficient for the purpose of causing a different construction to be put upon that word in the instrument.—MALLAN v. MAY (1841), 13 M. & W. 511; 14 L. 4. —— Used in will.]—"London" in its popular sense is a word of fluctuating extent.

Testator domiciled in Paris bequeathed his residue "to the hospitals of Paris & London." The ct., considering testator had used the word London in the ordinary & popular sense in which persons are said to reside in London rejected all the local boundaries suggested, & held that an accurate definition of the extent of the limits of the metropolis of London was not capable of being made, & it determined on deciding the rights of each claimant separately. The ct also considered that houses which stood in a street with houses continuous to the Cities of London & Westminster & the borough of Southwark, were within the limit & also that the Consumption Hospital at Brompton came within the terms of the bequest.—WALLACE v. A.-G. 5. ——— Used in statute—Applies strictly to City of London only.]—D. was rector of the united benefices of St. Vedast & St. Michaelmle Querne. The right of presentation to these benefices was first vested alternately in the Archbishop of Canterbury & the Dean & Chapter of St. Paul's, but afterwards, during D.'s incumbency, the alternate turn or right of patronage then belonging to the Dean & Chapter of St. Paul's was vested in the Bishop of London & his successors. A representation against D., under Public Worship Act, 1874 (c. 85), s. 7, was sent to the Bishop of London, & was by the bishop duly transmitted to the Archbishop of Canterbury. The archbishop thereupon, by instrument of requisition, required the judge to hear matters of the representation "at any place in London or Westminster, or within the diocese of London, as you may deem fit." The judge heard the case in the public library at Lambeth Palace, which, though in the province of Canterbury, is neither in London, Westminster, nor the diocese of London, & gave judgment against D., who had notice of the proceedings, but did not appear. A monition, & subsequently an inhibition, were issued against D., & his benefice was sequestered. D. did not know that the patronage of the living had been transferred to the bishop until after the sentence had been given against him & the monition issued. After the sequestration & nine months after the sentence, he applied for a prohibition to the Arches Ct.:—Held: the prohibition must be granted, for the bishop was patron of the benefices within Public Worship Act, 1874 (c. 85), s. 16, & was disqualified from acting in the matters of the representation, & D. had not acquiesced in the proceedings, & his application for a prohibition was not too late.

6. ——— ——— ———.]—A representation under Public Worship Act, 1874 (c. 85), was forwarded to the Bishop of Rochester charging that T., the incumbent of a parish within the diocese, had been guilty of illegal practices in the conduct of divine service. The bishop transmitted the representation to the Archbishop of Canterbury, & the Archbishop thereupon by instrument of requisition required the judge to hear & determine the matter of the representation "at any place in London or Westminster, or within the diocese of Rochester, as you may deem fit." Notice was given to T. that the case would be heard in Lambeth Palace, which, although within the province of Canterbury, is neither in London, Westminster, nor the diocese of Rochester.

In July, 1876, the case was heard at Lambeth Palace in his absence, & he was adjudged to have been guilty of illegal practices, & a monition was made for him to abstain from them. On his non-compliance with the monition, he was pronounced guilty of contempt & imprisoned. From first to last he took no notice of the proceedings, & in no way acquiesced in them:—Held: the whole proceeding was void, & a prohibition must be granted, for the word "London" in the requisition could only be construed in its strict sense as the City proper of London, & the judge had no power, under the Act or otherwise, to sit in any place beyond the limits fixed by the Archbishop.—HUDSON v. TOOTH (1877), 3 Q. Part III.—The London County Council.

7. Whether exercising judicial functions—Hearing applications for licences.]—The London County Council delegates to a committee of their body the hearing of applications or music & dancing licences, which committee, after hearing evidence, recommends to the council the granting or refusal of such applications. Two applications for renewal & music & dancing licences were made to the committee, who, by a majority, recommended that the applications should not be granted. Appcts. thereupon applied to the council for the licences. Four of the committee who had voted in the majority against the renewal instructed counsel to appear on their behalf at the hearing before the council, & to oppose the applications. Three of the said four members of the committee were also present at the hearing, & when the proceedings began were sitting among those adjudicating, but they subsequently retired & did not vote but remained in the room. The council by a majority refused the applications for the licences:—Held: (1 the applications had not been heard, & determined according to law; the presence at the hearing of those members who had instructed counsel to oppose the applications vitiated the proceedings; (2) The London County Council in adjudicating on these applications for licences were acting judicially & were bound by the ordinary principles of justice, & their discretion to grant or refuse licences must be exercised according to the rules of reason & justice.—R. v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, Ex p. AKKERSDYK, Ex p. FERMENIA, [1892] 1 Q. 8. ——— ———.]—A meeting of the London County Council for granting music & dancing licenses under Disorderly Houses Act, 1751 (c. 36), s. 2, is not a ct. within the meaning of the rule by which defamatory statements made in the course of proceedings before a ct. are absolutely privileged. Therefore, a county councillor making a defamatory statement at such a meeting with regard to a person applying for a licence is not entitled to absolute immunity from an action in respect of such statement. After granting permission to sell literature at meetings in certain parks, they passed a resolution that the existing permission should be determined & that no new permission should be granted thenceforth. Acting on this resolution they refused an application made by a certain society for permission to sell pamphlets at its meeting in one of the parks:—Held: there was vested in the London County Council by virtue of the bye-laws a discretion similar to that of justices at licensing sessions, & they did not properly exercise that discretion by passing a general resolution to grant no permission & acting on that resolution.—R. v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, Ex p. CORRIE, [1918] 1 K. 16. SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

19. Vestry room remains property of vicar & churchwardens.]—In the year 1719 the parish church of St. Martin-in-the-Fields was rebuilt under a local Act, which also provided for the building of a parish vestry room. This vestry room was built on ground which was purchased for & added to the churchyard, & the site of the vestry room & certain burial vaults constructed underneath it were consecrated & used as a place for burials. In 1826 this vestry room was pulled down & replaced by a building erected under 7 Geo. 4, c. 77, which provided that the new vestry room & the ground on which it was erected should be vested in the persons or bodies corporate in whom the room in lieu of which it was erected would have been vested if the Act had not been passed. In the basement of the new vestry room vaults were constructed & used for burials, the site having been previously consecrated. This vestry room was used, as its predecessor had been, for meetings of the vestry, & for other ecclesiastical and civil purposes connected with the affairs of the parish. In 1891 the vestry, which had then become a corpn. under Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), having built a new town hall at some distance from the church, gave up possession of the old vestry room to the vicar & churchwardens. By London Government Act, 1899 (c. 14), the property & powers of the old vestry were transferred to pltfs., who, in 1903, brought an action against the vicar & churchwardens to recover possession of the old vestry room :—Held : by Burial Act, 1816 (c. 141), s. 4, the then vestry room, being erected on a site which was consecrated as burial ground, was vested in the vicar of the parish, the vestry room of 1826 was by the Act under which it was erected similarly vested, & consequently that it did not pass under the Act of 1899 as "property of the vestry" to pltfs.—WESTMINSTER CORPN. v. ST. 20. Adjustment of areas & expenses between councils—Case stated under London Government Act, 1899 (c. 14), s. 29—No costs awarded.]—On a case stated under above sect., the ct. will not make any order as to costs.—PADDINGTON BOROUGH COUNCIL v. KENSINGTON ROYAL BOROUGH COUNCIL (1911), 105 L. SECT. 2.—THE CONSTITUTION.

SUB-SECT. 1.—THE MAYOR AND ALDERMEN.

21. Alderman—Disqualification—Absence for six months consecutively—From when computed.]—By Local Government Act, 1894 (c. 73), s. 46 (6), which is incorporated in London Government Act, 1899 (c. 14), by sect. 2 (5) of the latter Act, so far as relates to the offices of mayor & alderman, if a member of a council of a parish or district, including now an alderman, is absent from meetings of the council for more than six months consecutively, except in certain cases, his office shall, on the expiration of those months, become vacant. Pltf., who was an alderman of a metropolitan borough, was absent from a meeting of the council on June 6, 1905, & from each subsequent meeting until Nov. 21, when he was again present :—Held : the absence must begin to be reckoned from the first meeting at which pltf. was absent, viz. June 6, & as the six months from that date had not expired on Nov. 21, his office had not become vacant.—KERSHAW v. SHOREDITCH CORPN. (1906), 95 L. T. 55 ; 70 J. P. 190 ; 22 T. L. R. 302 ; 4 L. G. 22. Disqualification of liability to penalties—"Being concerned or interested in any contract."]—By Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), s. 54, if a member of a vestry is concerned or interested in any contract made with the vestry, he ceases to be a member, & is liable to penalties. Deft. lent money to a person who had made a contract with a vestry, & the benefit of the contractor was assigned to deft. as security for the loan. Afterwards deft. was elected a member of the vestry :—Held : Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), s. 54, applied to a contract made before deft. became a member of the vestry, deft. was interested in the contract within the meaning of the sect. ; & there was evidence of his having acted as a member of the vestry.—HUNNINGS v. WILLIAMSON (1883), 11 Q. 23. Method of voting—By show of hands—Division claimed after show of hands.]—By a bye-law made pursuant to Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), s. 202, it was provided that "all questions shall be determined by a show of hands, or by a division, if demanded, with the names recorded":—Held: the division or poll might take place after a show of hands.—TEAR v. FREEBODY (1858), as reported in 4 C. 24. Meeting for special purpose—Necessity for notice.]—Where on a transfer of powers & officers from a vestry to a borough council under the London Government Act, 1899 (c. 14), an officer, whose office is abolished, makes a claim for compensation, the council is the proper tribunal to decide, with a view to assessing his compensation, what has been the amount of his salary & emoluments, & their finding of fact cannot be reviewed by the ct.

Where a borough council after investigation of the circumstances have passed a resolution under Local Government Act, 1888 (c. 41), s. 120, assessing the compensation payable to an officer for the abolition of his office, this resolution is binding on the council, & cannot be rescinded by a subsequent resolution on the ground that the amount claimed & assessed is excessive.

In 1874 the pltf. was appointed surveyor to the vestry of St. George, Hanover Square, at a salary of £350 a year, which was increased from time to time. By the London Government Act, 1899 (c. 14), the borough of Westminster was constituted, which included the parish of St. George. In May, 1901, the Westminster City Council abolished pltf.'s office, & he sent in his claim for compensation based on the average of his salary & emoluments for the five years previous to the abolition of his office. On Aug. 1, 1901, the council passed a resolution granting him the amount claimed, namely, £518 12*s.* 4*d.* a year. There was no appeal to the Treasury from this resolution. In Nov. 1902, the auditor disallowed part of the compensation on the ground that it did not properly represent emoluments, & he surcharged the members of the council with the amount. On Nov. 20, 1902, the council passed a resolution rescinding their resolution of Aug. 1, 1901, & reducing pltf.'s allowance to £432 7*s.* 10*d.* He appealed to the Treasury, but this appeal was disallowed, & in July, 1903, commenced this action against the corpn. for the arrears of his allowance:—Held: (1) the period of five years of which pltf. had given particulars was the right period, but it was immaterial, as the council had a general power to assess; the question what was the amount of pltf.'s salary & emoluments was a question of fact which must be decided by the council, & it was not competent for the ct. to review their decision; even if the council exceeded the right amount their decision was not ultra vires: the vote was good up to the proper limit; the resolution of Aug. 1, 1901, was valid; the council had no power to relieve themselves from the obligation thus rendered binding upon them, & the resolution to rescind it was invalid.

26. Superannuation allowance—Discretion to grant or refuse—Discretion as to amount—Superannuation (Metropolis) Act, 1866 (c. 3), s. 1.]—A metropolitan vestry has a discretion under above sect. to grant or to refuse a superannuation allowance to a retiring officer; but, if an allowance be granted, the vestry has no discretion as to the amount, which must be in accordance with the scale prescribed in sect. 4.—R. v. ST. GEORGE'S, SOUTHWARK, VESTRY (1887), 19 Q. B. D. 533; 56 L. J. Q. B. 652; 52 J. P. 6; 35 W. R. 841, D. C.

27. —— —— —— ——.]—A metropolitan vestry has a discretion under above sect., not merely as to granting or refusing a superannuation allowance to a retiring officer, but also, if an allowance be granted, as to the amount, subject to the scale of maximum allowances prescribed in sect. 4.

28. —— ——.]—A metropolitan vestry appointed a committee to consider an application from a rate collector for a superannuation allowance. The committee, after fully considering the whole matter, reported that no pension should be granted on the ground of the high salary received by the collector for many years, & because he had been allowed to perform the office by deputy for several years. The vestry adopted the conclusions of this report & refused the application. More than a year previously, sixty out of one hundred & eight members of the vestry had been elected on a programme including the total abolition of pensions to salaried officers:—Held: there was not sufficient evidence that the vestry had not exercised their discretion lawfully.—R. v. BROMLEY ST. LEONARD VESTRY (1896), 60 J. P. 725; 13 T. L. R. 1; 41 Sol. Jo. 13, D. C.

29. —— "Every person designated an officer."]—A local Act provided a scheme under which every officer of the council who shall have completed a certain length of service or attained a certain age shall be entitled to a superannuation allowance. By sect. 2: "Officer" is defined to mean "every officer in the service of the Council designated an officer in an established capacity by a resolution of the Council passed or to be passed." In 1876, pltf. was, by a resolution of the vestry of the parish of St. Marylebone, defts.', predecessors, appointed the broker to execute warrants of distress for the recovery of the parochial rates, & acted in that capacity for many years. In 1899 the powers of the vestry were transferred to defts. by the London Government Act, 1899 (c. 14), & pltf. passed into their service as an officer to collect rates. From time to time resolutions were passed by the council, & entered in their minutes, in which pltf. was referred to as their warrant officer. Pltf., on leaving defts.' employment, claimed to be entitled to a pension under the local Act, as being an officer within the meaning of sect. 2:—Held: the word "designated" in sect. 2 did not mean "incidentally referred to," but meant "pointed out with particularity," & in the absence of any resolution designating pltf. an officer in an established capacity, he was not entitled to participate in the superannuation scheme.—NEWTON v. MARYLEBONE BOROUGH COUNCIL (1915), 84 L. The owner erected the building without complying with the condition, & the council refused to issue a certificate under s. 7 (2). The owner within two months therefrom appealed to the tribunal of appeal against the refusal of the certificate, & contended that he was entitled to raise the question whether the condition was one which could be reasonably required :— Held : an appeal against the condition ought to have been brought within two months after the conditional approval of the plans by the council, & upon the appeal against the refusal of the certificate the tribunal of appeal had jurisdiction only to determine the question whether the building had in fact been erected in accordance with the plans as approved.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. CLARK, [1912] 1 K. 36. Notice of objection—Service of—Buildings not in course of erection.]—In 1876 T. applied to the Metropolitan Board of Works for leave to erect an iron building called a skating rink at the back of his premises pursuant to Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (c. 122), s. 56, & the board granted leave on T. giving the board an undertaking to remove the building within two years. The time elapsed, & the board called on T. to remove the building, but he failed to do so:—Held: sects. 45 & 46 applied only to a building in course of erection & not to this case, & there was no power given to a magistrate to enforce its removal.—PARSONS v. TIMEWELL (1879), 44 J. 37. —— —— ——.]—By Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (c. 122), s. 45, if in erecting any building anything is done contrary to the rules of the Act, power is given to the district surveyor to give "the builder engaged in erecting such building" notice to cause anything done contrary to the rules of the Act to be amended; &, by s. 46, if the builder to whom such notice is given makes default in complying with such notice, a magistrate may, on the application of the surveyor, make an order requiring him to comply with it. By s. 105: "In cases where any building has been erected . . . without due notice to the district surveyor . . . the time during which the district surveyor may take any proceeding or do anything authorised or required by this Act to be done by him in respect of such building . . . shall begin to run from the date of his discovering that such building has been erected."

After the completion of a building, which had been erected without due notice to & without the knowledge of the district surveyor, he discovered that it infringed the rules of the Act. He thereupon served the builder who had erected the building with notice under s. 45, calling upon him to render the building conformable to the rules of the Act, &, upon his failing to comply with this notice, he obtained from a magistrate, under s. 46, an order requiring him to do so:—Held: ss. 45 & 46 only applied while the building was in course of erection, & s. 105 did not enable the surveyor to take any proceeding under these sections when the building had been completed.—SMITH v. LEGG, [1893] 1 Q. 38. —— —— ——.]—A justice has no jurisdiction to make an order under Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (c. 127), s. 46, upon a builder who at the date of the order has completed the building & given up possession of it, even though he was engaged in erecting it at the time of the service upon him of the notice under s. 45.—WALLEN v. LISTER, [1894] 1 Q. 39. —— —— Time for taking proceedings.]—G., the builder of a new house in the metropolis, on Apr. 1, sent notice to B., the district surveyor, with plans. On Aug. 4, B. served forty-eight hours' notice on G. to amend the work & leave sufficient area space, pursuant to 44 & 45 Vict. c. 14, s. 14. The house was then covered in, & nothing was done under the notice. On Feb. 1 following information of an offence was laid by B.:—Held: the offence was the refusal to do the work ordered on Aug. 4, & the information was within the six months' limitation.—BOVILL v. GIBBS (1887), 51 J. 40. —— Effect of failure to give.]—Failure by a district surveyor to give a notice of objection under 1894 Act, s. 150, is no bar to proceedings for default in complying with a notice of irregularity under 1894 Act, s 153, even although the district surveyor is aware of what is being done.—COGGIN v. DUFF (1907), 96 L. 42. Right to fees—Effect of 1894 Act.]—(1) The transfer by the London Government Act, 1899 (c. 14), of the powers & duties of the London County Council as to licencing the erection of wooden structures under 1894 Act, s. 84, to the borough councils established by the Act of 1899 does not operate as a transfer of the powers & duties of the district surveyors with respect to the supervision or inspection of those structures. Under the licence granted by a borough council a district surveyor has no powers, duties, or liabilities imposed upon him, unless he is named in the licence as the person to exercise supervision or inspection.

(2) Wooden structures falling within 1894 Act, s. 84, are works of which a district surveyor is entitled to notice under s. 145 of that Act, & as to which he may have duties of supervision & inspection independently of the terms of the licence of the borough council.

(3) The right to receive the fees for supervision & inspection specified in 1894 Act has not been transferred to the borough councils, nor has it wholly lapsed; a right to receive proper fees for duties necessarily performed remains in the district surveyor.—WESTMINSTER CORPN. v. WATSON, [1902] 2 K. 43. Who is an "owner"—Land let on building lease at peppercorn rent.]—Under Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (c. 122), s. 51, an owner of land in fee simple who lets it on a building lease at a peppercorn rent is not liable, as owner, to the surveyor for fees in respect of buildings afterwards erected on such land, a peppercorn rent not being within the meaning of the words "of the whole or of any part of the rents or profits of any land or tenement" in the interpretation clause, sect. 3.—EVELYN v. WHICHCORD (1858), E. B. & E. 126; 27 L. J. M. C. 211; 31 L. T. O. S. 96; 22 J. P. 658; 4 Jur. N. S. 808; 6 W. R. 468; 120 E. R. 455.

44. —— ——.]—Applt. being seised in fee of certain building land situate within the limits of Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (c. 122), entered into an agreement with L. to grant leases of ninety-nine years of certain plots of the land, so soon as L. should have erected houses thereon, at a peppercorn until June 24, 1870, & afterwards at £28 a year. L. built houses which were roofed in about Sept. 1870, & applt. became entitled to receive the first quarter's ground rent on Sept. 29; the houses were surveyed by resp., the district surveyor, & he, on Oct. 26, 1870, delivered a bill for his fees to L., who afterwards became insolvent. Resp. afterwards claimed payment of his fees from applt.:—Held: applt. was not liable to pay resp.'s fees, as he was not the "owner" of the houses within the meaning of sects. 3, 51; for L., the lessee for ninety-nine years, whether he had a legal or only an equitable title, had the power to let the houses & receive the profits, & was therefore "owner."—CAUDWELL v. HANSON (1871), L. 45. —— Owner at time fees become due.]—In 1866, notice was given by a builder to the district surveyor of his intention to erect three houses under Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (c. 122), s. 38. The surveyor inspected the houses, & the roofs were covered in on July 9, 1866, & on Aug. 9, 1866, the surveyor became entitled to certain fees from the "builder, owner, or occupier," under sect. 51. T. first became owner in 1869; & the surveyor, after due demand, took out a summons against T for the fees:—Held: "owner" meant owner for the time being when the fees became due; & T. was, therefore, not liable.—TUBB v. GOOD (1870), L. 46. For what buildings fee may be charged — Separate sets of chambers in one building.]—Fourteen sets of chambers were erected, intended to be tenanted by different persons, & contained in a building exceeding 3,600 square feet in area. Each set was separate from the others, & had its own separate entrance door giving access from the street entrance & staircase which were common to all. Adjoining sets were divided in accordance with Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (c. 122), s. 27, r. 2, horizontally by party arches or fireproof floors, & vertically by party walls. Resp., as district surveyor, claimed a fee in respect of each set of chambers as a separate building. On a case stated:—Held: the separate sets of chambers were not buildings within Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (c. 122), sched. II., Part I., & the district surveyor was entitled to one fee only in respect of the entire structure.—MOIR v. WILLIAMS, [1892] 1 Q. B. 264; 61 L. J. M. C. 33; 66 L. T. 215; 56 J. P. 197; 40 W. 47. —— Buildings erected for school board.]—By 1894 Act, s. 21, any building to be erected upon any lands belonging at the time of the coming into operation of the Act, to the London School Board, may be erected in accordance with the provision of any Act in force immediately before the passing of the Act:—Held: the fees payable to the district surveyor were also regulated by such earlier Act.—MARSLAND v. WALLIS & SONS (1900), 83 L. 48. —— ——.]—Applts. erected for the London County Council, as education authority for the county of London, school premises intended to be used as a special public elementary school, as contemplated by Elementary Education (Defective & Epileptic Children) Act, 1899 (c. 32). During the progress of the work resp., who was the district surveyor for the district, inspected it in that capacity. The premises were built in accordance with plans prepared by the architect to the London County Council Education Department & approved by the Board of Education, & such plans were in no way deviated from by reason of any requirements of resp. A building notice was served on the resp. under 1894 Act, s. 145, after the completion of the buildings, but not previously:—Held: although the building was exempted by 1894 Act, s. 201 (5), from the operation of Parts VI. & VII. of the Act, yet, as it had been decided in London County Council v. District Surveyors' Association & Willis, No. 71, post, that the district surveyor was entitled to notice in respect of such a building under s. 145, & as he had duties to perform in respect of it under Parts of the Act other than Parts VI. & VII., he was entitled to the fees mentioned in s. 154 as being payable to the district surveyor.—GALBRAITH BROTHERS v. DICKSEE (1910), 102 L. 49. —— Reservoir.]—A water co. was empowered by a special Act to make & maintain in the lines & situation & according to the levels shown on the deposited plans & sections the reservoirs, lines of pipes, & other works thereinafter described, with all proper wells, filtering beds, & other appliances for collecting, filtering, storing, & distributing water. The co. constructed, under the powers of the Act, two covered storage reservoirs in the metropolitan district of the cubical extent of 2,900,000 cubic feet & 2,769,000 cubic feet respectively. The reservoirs had a flooring of concrete, with walls of brickwork backed by concrete & earth, & were covered in by a series of brick arches supported by brick piers 20 feet high. The brick arches were covered with a layer of concrete with earth on top. The reservoirs in some portion projected above the surface of the ground:—Held: the reservoirs were "buildings or structures" within 1894 Act, sects. 138, 145, 154; the application of those sects. was not inconsistent with the provisions of the special Act; & therefore it was the duty of the district surveyor to supervise the construction of the reservoirs, & he was entitled to his fees for such supervision.—MORAN & SON, LTD. v. MARSLAND, [1909] 1 K. 50. —— Additions & alterations to building.]—(1) The question whether a building is a new building within Education (Administrative Provisions) Act, 1911 (c. 32), s. 3, is one of fact.

(2) Where a district surveyor has been served with a building notice under 1894 Act, s. 145, in respect of works consisting in the making of additions & alterations in a building, & has consequential duties to perform, & performs those duties, he is entitled to the fees payable under sect. 154 (1), & Schedule III. of the Act.—AKERS & CO., LTD. v. DAUBNEY (1915), 85 L. dangerous, & the steps prescribed by the "dangerous structures" provisions of 1894 Act were duly taken with regard to it, & an inspection of the party wall was made by the district surveyor. The county council paid to the district surveyor two sets of fees in respect of his inspection of the party wall, which was the dangerous structure in question, & claimed to recover the two sets of fees from the owners. They had already recovered one set of fees from one of the owners:—Held: the party wall was only one dangerous structure within the meaning of the Act, & the county council were entitled to recover only one set of fees in respect of the surveyor's inspection of the same.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. SHEINMAN (1905), 93 L. 52. Recovery of fees—When "default" occurs—1894 Act, s. 157 (2).]—Where default is made by a builder in payment of the fees due from him to the district surveyor under 1894 Act, s. 154, they may, under above sub-sect., be recovered from the owner within six calendar months from the delivery to him of a proper bill specifying the amount of the fees, inasmuch as until that time the "matter of complaint" within Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (c. 42), s. 11, does not arise.—CORBETT v. BADGER, [1901] 2 K. C. raised the wall 5 feet, & then covered in the yard between the wall & his house with a roof, the said building being beyond the line of street, as certified by the superintending architect:—Held: the roof inclosure constituted a building within Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 102), s. 75. Semble: the magistrate had power to order the roof to be removed, but not to order the wall to be reduced to its original height.—CLARK v. ST. 60. —— Temporary flooring.]—Applts. were employed as contractors by a borough council to fit together & place in public baths which were vested in the council by London Government Act, 1899 (c. 14), temporary wooden floorings in order that the baths might be used as halls during the winter months. Applts. began the construction of the floorings before serving a building notice under 1894 Act, s. 145, on resp., the district surveyor of the council. Resp. laid an information under the Act against applts. for neglecting to serve such a notice. The magistrate convicted applts., but found that the floorings did not affect & were not likely to affect the baths :—Held : the case of Venner v. M'Donell, No. 59, ante, was an authority governing this case. The floorings did not form a "structure, or building or work," before the commencement of which a building notice must be served upon a district surveyor under 1894 Act, s. 145, as according to the finding of the magistrate they did not affect & were not likely to affect the building in which they were placed, & so did not come within s. 78 of the Act. —HANDOVER v. MEESON (1903), 67 J. 67. —— Building vested in & in occupation of Crown.]—On Apr. 5, 1911, a summons was taken out under 1894 Act, s. 153, by resp., a district surveyor for the purposes of London Building Acts, against a firm of builders for non-compliance with a notice of irregularity which had been served upon them by resp. on Mar. 31, 1911, under 1894 Act, s. 151, in respect of a building in course of erection by them. The building was admittedly not in accordance with the London Building Acts. On July 20, 1911, a metropolitan magistrate made an order for compliance with the notice, the building having at that date become vested in & in the occupation of the Crown :—Held : the magistrate had no power to make the order. The order related to the building itself & was not merely an order that the builder should pay a fine for some previous offence, & inasmuch as the building was at the date of the order vested in & in the occupation of the Crown, it was within the exemption contained in 1894 Act, s. 202.—DELLAR BROTHERS, LTD. & TERRITORIAL FORCE ASSOCN. 68. Exemption by virtue of special Act—Canal company.]—By Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (c. 122), s. 38, two days before any building is commenced, a notice in writing containing specified particulars must be given by the builder to the district surveyor appointed under the Act; & s. 6 exempts from the operation of this part of the Act any building belonging to a canal co., "& used for the purposes of" the canal under the provisions of any Act of Parliament.

A canal co. under their statutory powers put up a building upon one of their wharves, the wharf & the building being let by the co. to an institution for distributing firewood. The building was used by the tenants as a place in which to chop up firewood. The co. were not a carrying co., but took tolls for the passage of barges along their canal, & it was agreed between themselves & their tenants that all the wood required by the latter should be brought to the wharf & building in their barges along the co.'s canal :—Held : the building was not "used for the purposes of the canal" within Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (c. 122), s. 6, & therefore the notice required by s. 38 ought to have been given.—COOLE v. LOVEGROVE, [1893] 2 Q. 70. Dock company.]—By Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), s. 76, it is required that before beginning to lay or dig out the foundations of any new building seven days' notice in writing should be given to the local authority by the person intending to build. In 1894 a dock co. obtained statutory authority to make certain alterations in their dock premises, & it became necessary as ancillary to those alterations to demolish a certain workshop & erect another in its place. No notice of the intention of the dock co. to erect the new workshop was given to the local authority :—Held : the interference & control involved in Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), s. 76, was inconsistent with the powers conferred upon the dock co. under their statutory authority, & there was therefore no need for them to give notice to the local authority of their intention to erect the new workshop.—SURREY

71. —— Buildings for education authority.]—Applts. as the local education authority for London commenced to erect a building to be used as a public elementary school. By the code of building regulations for public elementary schools issued by the Board of Education in pursuance of the Education Acts, 1870 to 1902, such buildings are required to comply with the provisions therein stated as to the height & dimensions of the rooms, corridors, & staircases, the construction of the walls, floors, roofs, & staircases, the lighting, ventilating & warming of the buildings & the sanitary arrangements in connection with them.

By 1894 Act, s. 201 (5), "public buildings occupied for public purposes by the County Council of London" are exempt from the operation of the portion of that Act relating to the construction of buildings. Applts. did not before commencing to build serve a building notice upon the district surveyor in accordance with 1894 Act, s. 145:—Held: applts. were not exempt from the obligation to serve a building notice either by the fact that the building was a public elementary school & as such subject to the jurisdiction of the Board of Education, or that it was a "public building occupied" by applts. "for public purposes," or that the district surveyor was an officer appointed & dismissible by applts.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. DISTRICT SURVEYORS' ASSOCN. & WILLIS, [1909] 2 K. B. 138; 78 L. J. K. 72. —— ——.]— A firm of builders had entered into a contract with the London County Council as the education authority for the county of London for the erection of certain buildings to be erected as a public elementary school according to plans approved by the Board of Education. No building notice was given to the district surveyor. The builders were convicted of an offence under 1894 Act:—Held: 1894 Act, s. 145 was a provision in a local Act "dealing with the construction of new buildings" within Education (Administrative Provisions) Act, 1911 (c. 32), s. 3, & therefore did not apply to the buildings in question; & consequently the conviction was wrong.—HOLLIDAY & GREENWOOD, LTD. v. DISTRICT SURVEYORS' ASSOCN. & DICKSEE, [1914] 2 K. 73. —— Railway company.]—A railway co. in 1866 were empowered by a special Act to "enter upon, take & use" for the purposes of their railway a certain site adjoining a street in the Metropolis. The special Act incorporated the Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (c. 20), by s. 16 of which the co. "may erect & construct such . . . buildings . . . & other works & conveniences as they think proper" & "may do all . . . acts necessary for making maintaining . . . & using the railway." In 1908 the co. erected upon the site an accumulator shed which was used for railway purposes in connection with the electrical signalling upon their railway. The shed was in front of the general line of buildings in the street:—Held: both the general power to "use" the site for the purposes of the railway given by the special Act & the general powers given by Railways Clauses Act conferred a statutory power to erect the accumulator shed upon that site within 1894 Act, s. 31, & a special power authorising that particular work was not necessary to entitle the co. to build in front of the general building line without the consent of the county council.—METROPOLITAN RY. 74. —— ——.]—By a special Act, resp. railway co. were authorised to make & maintain railways & (inter alia) all "proper" stations, works, & conveniences connected therewith. The Act incorporated the Railway Clauses (Consolidation) Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 16, of which empowered railway cos. (inter alia) to execute works & construct such buildings & other works & conveniences "as they think proper."

Under these powers the railway co. executed certain sanitary works & constructed certain sanitary conveniences at one of their stations. Applt., a sanitary inspector, preferred informations against them for breaches in respect of these conveniences of byelaws made by the London County Council in pursuance of Metropolitan Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), s. 202. The magistrate found as a fact that the sanitary conveniences were proper conveniences within s. 5 of the special Act. He further found that the exercise by applt. of some of the rights conferred by the bye-laws would or might cause inconvenience & for danger to the working by the railway co. of the traffic on their lines; but the exercise by applt. of the said rights, with reference to the said water-closets would not have caused any such inconvenience or danger:—Held: the interference & control involved in Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), s. 202), were inconsistent with the powers conferred on resp. railway co. by the special Act, & therefore the bye-laws made under Metropolitan Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), s. 202, did not apply to the premises & works of resp. co.—KERSHAW v. LONDON, MIDLAND & SCOTTISH RY. 75. Building more than half taken down—Power of district surveyor to direct rebuilding of party-wall.]—Subsequently to the commencement of 1894 Act, a building within the administrative county of London, which had been partially burnt, was taken down for more than half its cubical extent, but the party-wall between it & the adjoining building was taken down to the extent of less than one-half thereof, & re-erected in conformity with the previous building acts. The district surveyor ordered the party-wall to be rebuilt from the ground upwards in accordance with 1894 Act:—Held: under 1894 Act, s. 208, the surveyor had no jurisdiction to order the remaining part at least of the party-wall to be pulled down & rebuilt in accordance with the requirements of that act.—CROW v. REDHOUSE (1895), 59 J. P. 663 ; 11 T. L. R. 563, C. A.

77. What amounts to repair—Replacement of roof.]—A certain house in London had a flat wooden roof covered with zinc. The zinc having become defective, the owner employed a builder to repair it. The builder stripped off the zinc, & substituted for it felt covered with a layer of asphalte. On appeal by the builder against a conviction for failing to serve a building notice in accordance with 1894 Act, s. 209 : —Held : there was evidence on which the magistrates might find that the stripping of the roof & the substitution of another material for the external covering was an alteration which was something more than a repair, & consequently did not come within the exception.—GODDARD v. GREIG, [1917] 2 K. The opening of the doorway was not enlarged, but rather contracted ; & the structure of the external wall was not in any other respect altered :—Held : no notice had been necessary, as the work was within sect. 9 of the Act, that is, " work done for necessary repair not affecting any external or party-wall in, to, or upon any old building."—BADGER v. DENN (1858), 22 J. By Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (c. 43), s. 1, a summons issued upon any information or complaint shall be served by delivering it to the person to whom it is directed or by leaving it with some person for him at his last or most usual place of abode. A summons issued upon a complaint made under 1894 Act & addressed " To the owner " of a building alleged to be in a dangerous condition, was served by fixing a copy of the summons on a conspicuous part of the building. The premises were said to be unoccupied. The owner did not appear on the summons :—Held : in the absence of evidence that reasonable inquiry had been made to find out who was the owner so that he could be served under Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (c. 43), s. 1, the provisions of 1894 Act, s. 188, were not applicable & therefore the service was bad.—R. v. MEAD, [1898] 1 Q. They would be suitable for occupation by any person living in a small way whether belonging to the working class or not," & that "resp. had no intention that the houses should be occupied by persons of the working class only, but that he intended them for occupation by anyone who would take them":—Held: it was doubtful whether the magistrate had applied the proper test under the sect. to the two questions of fact, & he may have misdirected himself by limiting the scope of the "adaptation" by the words "specially" & "only," & by limiting the scope of the "intention" by the addition of the word "only."

came into operation, an opening was made in the wall which separated two adjoining houses, numbered 66 & 67 A. street. A third house numbered 6 L. lane, afterwards came into the same occupation, & an opening was then & after the Act came into operation, made in the wall which divided the house in L. lane, from No. 66, A. Street. The three houses taken together exceeded in area 216,000 cubic feet, but the cubic area of No. 6, L. lane, & 66 A. street, was less than that quantity. Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (c. 121), s. 28, provides, that "where an opening is made in a party wall dividing buildings, which if taken together would contain more than 216,000 cubic feet" certain conditions must be complied with:—Held: Nos. 66 & 67 A. street had been united so as to become one building, & in making the opening in the wall between No. 66 & the house in L. lane, the conditions required by sect. 28 must be complied with.—ASHBY v. WOODTHORPE (1863), 3 New Rep. 249; 33 L. J. M. C. 68; 9 L. T. 409; 27 J. P. 792; 12 W. R. 209.

91. —— —— Addition of new building.]—By Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (c. 121), s. 9, an addition to an old building is subject to the regulations of the Act; by sect. 27, r. 4, certain buildings containing more than 216,000 cubic feet are to be divided by party-walls; & by sect. 28, r. 2, no buildings shall be united, if when so united they will be in contravention of the Act. A new building was added to an old building the united building containing more than 216,000 cubic feet:—Held: the united building was not within the words of the Act, & need not be divided by a party-wall.—SCOTT v. LEGG (1877), 10 Q. B. D. 236; 46 L. J. M. C. 267; 36 L. T. 456; 41 J. P. 773; 25 W. R. 594, C. A.

92. —— —— Connection by covered way.]—1894 Act, s. 77 (1), prohibits the "uniting" of buildings, except where they are wholly in one occupation, or are constructed or adapted to be so.

A builder proposed to build six blocks of flats to be used as private residences. Two of these blocks fronted on a street, one of these being completed & the other only partially so. The proposal showed four other blocks in the rear of these, & each of the four blocks as proposed to be erected contained its own staircase, its own entrance, & a connection between each pair of adjacent blocks by a door leading from the bathrooms of one block to the bathrooms of the adjacent block. There was also a passage or corridor leading from end to end through the four blocks. The walls between these four blocks were party-walls going up to, but not through, the roof, & each block was capable of being let separately. What the builder intended to erect was a single separate building, & not a union under one roof of separate buildings:—Held: the connecting of the blocks by means of a corridor was not a "uniting" of them within 1894 Act, s. 77 (1), & there had been no "uniting" of buildings, either of the partly completed block in front with the four blocks in the rear, or of these four blocks with each other.

The mere connecting of two buildings by a covered passage or way does not come within the sect. as a uniting of the buildings.

Semble: sect. 77 means the union of two existing & separate buildings which were built as separate buildings, & which have been united within the meaning of that sect., & the sect. does not apply to additions built on to, & connected with, a previously existing structure.—GOODCHILD v. MATTHEWS (1903), 8 L. T. 369; 67 J. P. 296; 19 T. L. R. 492; 1 L. G. R. 523, D. C.

93. —— Buildings united by openings—Construction of further openings.]—(1) Where buildings not wholly in one occupation are in fact united by an opening, although the said opening may have been made without the necessary consents under Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (c. 121), or under 1894 Act, it is no offence against s. 77 (1) of the latter Act to make another opening between the same buildings.

(2) The words "or are constructed or adapted to be so" in the same sub-sect. have reference to the state of things at the time of the uniting & not at the time of the original construction.—WOODTHORP v. SPENCER & HUSBANDS (1899), 63 J. P. 246, D. C.

94. Roof covering—Material partly combustible & partly incombustible.]—The roof of a building was covered externally with materials consisting of woven wire material coated with an oleaginous compound. The coating would ignite & burn away, leaving the wirework uninjured:—Held: the roof was not covered with "incombustible materials" within Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (c. 122), s. 19 (1).—PAYNE v. WRIGHT, [1892] 1 Q. 95. Separation of buildings—Buildings used partly for trade—Separation by concrete floor.]—Applts. erected a building consisting of eight floors. The basement was intended to be used for the packing of goods, the ground floor as a retail shop, & the floors above for dining-rooms & kitchens. The two upper storeys were supported by a concrete floor 9½ inches thick, with four openings in it for the purposes of lifts. The cubical contents of the whole building were 289,456 feet, including a staircase which was 16,636 cubic feet, & the cubical contents above the concrete floor were 62,087 feet:—Held: the building was a building used partly for the purposes of trade & the provisions of Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (c. 122), s. 27, r. 4, had not been complied with.—HOLLAND v. WALLEN (1894), 70 L. 96. —— Building used partly as dwelling-house—Public-house.]—A fully licensed public-house is not a building "used in part for purposes of trade or manufacture & in part as a dwelling-house" within 1894 Act, s. 74; so that the means of approach to the part used as a dwelling-house need not be constructed of fire-resisting materials as required by that sect.—CARRITT v. GODSON & SONS, [1899] 2 Q. 97. —— —— ——.]—In a special case stated by a metropolitan police magistrate upon an objection raised by a district surveyor that 1894 Act, s. 74 (2), applied to a building about to be erected as a beerhouse, the magistrate found as a fact that the basement & ground floor of the building were intended to be used for the purpose of the trade of a beerhouse & that the part above the ground-floor was intended to be used as a dwelling-house for the licensed occupier; but he held that the case was governed by the decision in Carritt v. Godson & Sons, No. 96, ante, & overruled the objection of the district surveyor:—Held: the question whether the building was within 1894 Act, s. 74 (2), was concluded by the finding of fact in the case at bar, which was binding

99. Power to licence in borough council—London Government Act, 1899 (c. 14), s. 5, sched. II., Part I.]—A structure made wholly of wood, except so far as nails are used in its construction, & erected for the temporary purpose of enabling persons to view a public procession or spectacle, is a wooden structure within 1894 Act, s. 84, & the power to licence the setting up of such a structure, & to take proceedings for default in obtaining or observing the conditions of a licence, is transferred by above Act from the London County Council to each of the borough councils established by that Act as respects their borough.—WESTMINSTER CORPN. v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, [1902] 1 K. Sects. 121, 122, 123 are not provisions "dealing with the construction of new buildings" within Education (Administrative Provisions) Act, 1911 (c. 32), s. 3, & school buildings though built in accordance with plans approved by the Board of Education are not exempted from their operation.—HIGGS & HILL, LTD. v. STEPNEY BOROUGH COUNCIL, [1914] 1 K. 101. By the permission of the railway co. applts. erected in the coal yard a small wooden structure which they used as a coal office. The use of this coal office by applts. was a matter of convenience to the railway co. in that it contributed to the speedy clearing of the coal trucks from the co.'s sidings:—Held: the structure in question was "used in connection with the traffic of the railway co.," within 1894 Act, s. 86, & its erection did not require the licence of resps. under sect. 84.—ELLIOTT v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, [1899] 2 Q. 108. Deposit of plans—Time for.]—The provision in 1905 Act, s. 7, which deals with means of escape in case of fire in certain new buildings, requiring the deposit of plans "before or at the same time" as the building notice, is directory only, & not a condition precedent either to the jurisdiction of the county council to approve or reject the plans or to the right of the building owner to appeal under 1905 Act, s. 22, to the tribunal of appeal from the rejection of the plans.

So where a building owner, having given a building notice in the case of a high building, subsequently deposited plans showing the means of escape in case of fire, which were rejected by the county council:—Held: he was not precluded from appealing to the tribunal of appeal from the rejection by reason of his failure to deposit the plans before or at the same time as the building notice.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. SPINK & SON, LTD., [1908] 2 K. 109. Dwelling-house occupied by not more than two families—Public-house occupied by tenant & staff.]—A fully licensed public-house contained four storeys above the basement. The ground floor was used almost entirely as a bar. There were two sitting-rooms on the first floor & six bedrooms on the two upper floors. The house was inhabited by thirteen persons, namely, the tenant, his wife & three children, their servant, & the members of the public-house staff, all of whom slept there. Upon an information for non-compliance with the provisions of 1905 Act, s. 12, the magistrate was of opinion that the house was a dwelling-house & that it was occupied as such by one family only, & that therefore sect. 12 did not apply:—Held: upon the facts the magistrate was justified in finding that the house was a dwelling-house occupied as such by one family, & was therefore within the exemption in sect. 12, it being impossible to draw a distinction between the tenant's servant & the members of the public-house staff, & to say that the latter were not equally members of the same family as the former.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. CANNON BREWERY CO., LTD., [1911] 1 K. 111. Duties of London County Council—Ministerial—Capable of delegation.]—Where a public duty vested in a public body is not discretionary but merely ministerial the public body may delegate it to one of its officers.

The duties of the London County Council as to dangerous structures under 1894 Act, Part IX., are merely ministerial, & may, therefore, be delegated to the council's superintending architect.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. HOBBIS (1896), 75 L. T. 687; 61 J. P. 85; 45 W. R. 270; 41 Sol. Jo. 143, D. C.

112. What amounts to a dangerous structure—Structure not adjacent to highway.]—A justice of the peace has jurisdiction under Metropolitan Buildings Act, 1855 (c. 122), s. 73, to order the owner of a dangerous structure to take down or secure the same, even though such structure is not adjacent to a highway & therefore not dangerous to the public.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. HERRING, [1894] 2 Q. 113. —— Apprehension of injury to adjoining owners.]—The fact that the London County Council has in pursuance of the power given to it by 1894 Act, s. 106, temporarily shored up a structure certified by the district surveyor to be in a dangerous state does not prevent the structure from still being in a dangerous state within 1894 Act, ss. 103, 107 (1); & the owner still remains liable, in proceedings taken against him under those sects. in a petty sessional ct., to an order to take down, repair, or otherwise secure to the satisfaction of the district surveyor the structure or such part thereof as appears to the ct. to be in a dangerous state.

In order that a house may be dangerous within 1894 Act, ss. 103, 106 & 107 (1), it is not necessary that it should be dangerous to inmates or to the public passing along the adjacent highway. It is sufficient if there is an apprehension of danger or injury to adjoining houses or to their inhabitants, or even to trespassers.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. JONES, [1912] 2 K. B. 504; 81 L. J. K. By the lease the tenant was exempted from paying rent for the time that the house was untenantable by reason of an accidental fire:—Held: the expenses incurred could not be recovered from the landlord, a tenant for life of the reversion, under Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (c. 122), s. 42, which throws the burden upon "the owner of every such building, being the person entitled to the immediate possession thereof."—Ex p. SAFFRON HILL OVERSEERS (1854), 24 L. The board sought to charge against the owner, under sect. 73, as "expenses incurred in respect of a dangerous structure," in addition to the surveyor's fees allowed by sects. 77–79, the following items, which by resolution of the board, had been resolved should be charged against owners in respect of dangerous structures, viz., 3*s.* 6*d.* for preparation of notices & forms, 2*s.* 6*d.* for clerk's time in service of notices; & 2*s.* 6*d.* for general office expenses:—Held: the board were not entitled to charge the last item, but were entitled to charge the other two.—METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS v. FLIGHT (1873), L. 120. Reference to arbitration—Effect of 1894 Act, s. 107.]—The true construction of above sect. is as follows: If the surveyors meet & report within the seven days, or if they disagree, & the arbitrator report within fourteen days the matter is at an end. But if the owner, having given notice of arbn., fail to appoint a surveyor, or if the surveyor whom he has appointed fail to concur in the appointment of an arbitrator, or in any way fail to report within the seven days, then the owner's counter-requisition for arbn. drops if no arbitrator has been appointed; but if an arbitrator has been duly appointed then upon the surveyors disagreeing, or failing to report within the seven days, the whole matters in dispute go to the arbitrator to be dealt with by him, & if the arbitrator is unable, from any cause, to report within the fourteen days, the ct. has power, under the Arbitration Act, 1889 (c. 49), to extend the time, or otherwise cure any defects.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. BERNSTEIN (1897), 61 J. 134. By Act of Parliament—Not by negative Acts.]—The bye-law was good, for this bye-law was founded upon the customs of London, which are of such force, that they shall stand against negative Acts of Parliament. . . . This bye-law is growing, springing, out of the custom, & every man who will trade in London ought to take notice of the customs of the City, which are the laws of the City (per CUR.).—LONDON CORPN. v. BERNARDISTON (1661), 1 Lev. 14; 83 E. 135. —— Affirmative Acts.]—A custom to elect a scavenger in the borough ct. of Southwark is taken away by an Act of Parliament ordaining that scavengers shall be chosen in London & Westminster, & the liberties thereof, according to the ancient usages thereof, & appointing a new form of election in all other places; for the statute being affirmative destroys a local custom inconsistent with it.—LONDON CORPN. v. GATFORD (1675), 2 Mod. 136. —— 22 Car. 2, c. 11—Management of parochial affairs.]—The union of parishes after the great Fire of London, under above Act, does not destroy the special customs by which, previous to such union, the parishes so united managed their affairs. Therefore, if the parishioners of two parishes, previous to their union under the statute, were accustomed to elect the respective parish clerks concurrently with the rectors, such custom exists after the union; & if a person be appointed to the office of clerk by the rector alone, without the concurrence of the majority of the parishioners, such appointment is invalid.—HARTLEY v. COOK (1833), 9 Bing. 728; 5 C. & P. 441; 3 Moo. & S. 230; 2 L. jurisdiction whatsoever, to hear, determine, judge, or examine, concerning the election of any person to be one of the Common Councilmen of the City; but by the immemorial custom of the City, the cognisance & examination of such elections belongs to the King's Ct. of Record, held before the Lord Mayor & aldermen.—BOLTON v. JEFFES (1718), 2 Bro. 141. ——— ——— ———.]—To a mandamus to the Lord Mayor & aldermen of London to admit & swear in A. to the office of alderman, they returned certain proceedings towards an election at a ward-mote ct., when A. was declared to be elected, & a return thereof made to the ct. of Lord Mayor & aldermen, & that that ct. has had from time immemorial cognisance & jurisdiction to inquire into & adjudicate upon all elections at wardmote cts. to city offices, upon the petition of any party interested; that petitions, by several parties interested, were presented against the return of A.; that the merits were inquired into, & the election declared null & void by the said ct. of Lord Mayor & aldermen; & that A. was not duly elected, wherefore, etc. Traverse of the allegation, that A. was not duly elected. At the trial of the issue, it appeared, that at first, the Lord Mayor appointed three clerks to take the poll; but on the second day, he dismissed two of them. After the number of votes was declared, a scrutiny was demanded, & granted, & then the Lord Mayor dismissed the suitors at the wardmote, "to meet again upon a fresh summons." After this the Lord Mayor went out of office, & his successor issued a fresh summons for holding a wardmote, & there took the scrutiny, & declared A. duly elected, which was returned to the ct. of Lord Mayor & aldermen; who, upon petitions being presented, declared the election void, as stated in the return. Upon a special case, stating these facts:—Held: (1) the return was good in form; (2) the custom set out for the Lord Mayor & aldermen to inquire into & adjudicate upon elections, did not oust the jurisdiction of this ct.; (3) the election was not invalid on account of the dismissal of two of the poll clerks, or the change of the presiding officer; (4) the wardmote ct. was not dissolved, but only adjourned, by the dismissal of the suitors to meet again on a fresh summons.—R. v. LONDON CORPN. 143. ——— ——— ——— Abrogation of custom by statute or bye-law.]—A custom of the City of London, that when the inhabitants of any ward shall three times elect & return to the ct. of Mayor & aldermen the same person to be alderman, who shall be by the said ct., according to another custom of the said city, adjudged on such three returns not to be a fit person to support the dignity & discharge the duties of the office, the Mayor & aldermen may elect & admit a fit person, being a freeman, out of the whole body of the citizens, to be alderman of such ward, is a valid custom in law:—Held: this custom is not abrogated by 11 Geo. 1, c. 18, nor by the bye-law of the city, by which, after reciting that by the ancient custom of the city, when any ward became vacant of an alderman, the inhabitants thereof, having right to vote, were wont to choose one person only, being a freeman, to be alderman of the ward; for reviving that custom, it was enacted, that from thenceforth in all elections of aldermen of the said city, at the ward-motes, there shall be elected only one able & sufficient citizen & freeman to be returned to the ct. of Mayor & aldermen, which person so elected shall be by them admitted to the office.—R. v. JOHNSON (1839), 6 Cl. & Fin. 41; Macl. & Rob. 1; 7 E. Part I.—In General.

SECT. 1.—"MINE."

See Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 75; Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 205 (1) (ix); Land Registration Act, 1925 (c. 21), s. 3 (xiv); Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 68 (6); Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), s. 117 (1) (xv); Universities & College Estates Act, 1925 (c. 24), s. 43 (vii).

1. Primary meaning — Underground excavation.]—Upon the partition of certain lands the mines of lead & coal, & other mines & minerals, were excepted:—Held: the term "minerals" included only such substances as were dug out of the earth by means of a mine, that is, by means of a pit or tunnel having a roof overhead, & did not include limestone rock, which in the present instance was worked by means of an open quarry having no roof.—DARVILL v. ROPER (1855), 3 Drew. 294; 3 Eq. Rep. 1004; 25 L. T. O. S. 302; 3 W. R. 467; 61 E. R. 915; sub nom. DAVVELL v. ROPER, 24 L. J. Ch. 779.

Annotations:—Consd. Bell v. Wilson (1865), 2 Drew. & Sm. 395. Refd. A.-G. for Isle of Man v. Mylchreest (1879), 4 App. Cas. 294; Tucker v. Linger (1882), 21 Ch. D. 18; Glasgow Corpn. v. Farie (1888), 13 App. Cas. 657.

2. —— ——.]—In a conveyance of land in Northumberland a reservation was made to the grantor of all "mines or seams of coal, & other mines, metals, or minerals," under the land granted, with liberty to dig, bore, work, lead, & carry away the same, & to make pits, etc.:—Held: (1) the term "minerals" included freestone, but the grantor had liberty only to get the freestone by underground mining, & not by working in an open quarry.

(2) What is a mine? Upon reference to the lexicographical part of the Encyclopædia Metropolitana, I find it there said that the word "mine" is derived from a Latin word of the lower ages, minare, signifying ducere, to lead; & the interpretation of the word is "to draw or lead, sc., a way, or passage underground, a subterraneous duct, course, or passage, whether in search of metals or to destroy fortifications, etc." The word "quarry" is to be found in the same dictionary. The word "quarry" is there stated to be derived from the French word quarriere, & the derivation is followed by this description, "In the Latin of the lower ages, quadratarius was a stonecutter qui marmora quadrat, & hence quarriere, the place where he quadrates, or cuts the stone in squares; the place where the stone is cut in squares; generally, a stone-pit"; clearly therefore referring to a place upon or above, & not under, the ground (TURNER, L.J.).

(3) Pltfs. are entitled to the account directed by the decree of what has been got by the improper working. There is not, I suppose, any dispute between pltf. & her husband, deft., . . . & it is not therefore material to consider whether pltf., . . . is entitled to the money which may be found due upon the account, by virtue of her separate estate for life, or of the remainder in fee, which is vested in her. The only question as to these moneys can be, whether pltf., . . . is entitled to them, as against the persons having estates in remainder, prior to the ultimate limitation in fee vested in her; & I think . . . that she is so entitled (TURNER L.J.).—BELL v. WILSON (1866), 1 Ch. App. 303; 35 L. J. Ch. 337; 14 L. T. 115; 12 Jur. N. S. 263; 14 W. R. 493, L. JJ.

3. —— ——.]—The primary meaning of the word "mine" standing alone is an underground excavation made for the purpose of getting minerals. . . . "Minerals," on the other hand, means primarily all substances, other than the agricultural surface of the ground, which may be got for manufacturing or mercantile purposes, whether from a mine, as the word would seem to signify, or such as stone or clay, which are got by open working. . . . The particular signification of each of these words may be varied largely by the context (KAY, J.).—MIDLAND RY. CO. v. HAUNCHWOOD BRICK & TILE CO. (1882), 20 Ch. D. 552; 51 L. J. Ch. 778; 46 L. 5. Whether excavation a "mine"—Question of fact—Dependent on mode of extraction.]—Whether an excavation in the earth, from which limestone is obtained, be a mine or not, is a question of fact.

Where sessions found that the limestone was obtained & raised by sinking shafts perpendicularly down to the stratum, which lay forty or fifty yards below the surface of the ground, & that the stratum was worked by roads & gateheads, & the stone raised to the surface by machinery, or carried under ground to a tunnel, which is the mode used in obtaining coal & ironstone:—Held: the property was a limestone mine.—R. v. SEDGLEY (INHABITANTS) (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 65; 9 L. J. O. S. M. C. 61; 109 E. R. 1068.

P. 245; Bourne v. Keane, [1919] A. C. 815.

6. —— —— —— Not on substance extracted.]—What is a mine, is chiefly a question of fact, to be tried, not by considering the nature of the substance-matter extracted, but by the mode of extracting.—R. v. BRETTELL (1832), 3 B. & Ad. 424; 1 L. J. M. C. 46; 110 E. R. 152.

substance obtained from it. But sessions are to apply that principle, & to find as a fact whether it be a mine or not.—R. v. DUNSFORD (1835), 2 Ad. & El. 568; 1 Har. & W. 93; 4 Nev. & M. K. B. 349; 2 Nev. & M. M. C. 524; 4 L. J. M. C. 59; 111 E. R. 219.

8. —— —— —— ——.] — Testator, by codicil, bequeathed "all shares in mines of which he should die possessed" to his wife absolutely. At the date of the codicil & of his death, besides certain mining shares acquired after the date of the codicil, testator possessed ten shares in a co. originally formed for slate, copper & lead mining, but afterwards reconstituted & limited to the working of slate quarries. It being shown, however, that for some years prior to the date of the codicil the co.'s slate works had been, to the knowledge of testator, & at the time of his death still were, carried on almost entirely by underground or mining operations, & not by quarrying:—Held: as against residuary legatees, the shares passed under the specific bequest.

I find that the authorities both at law & in equity concur in this, that, if the operations carried on are in fact mining operations, & not surface operations, whatever may be the material gained, whether it be slate, as in the present case, limestone, as in R. v. Sedgley Inhabitants, No. 5, ante, or clay, as in R. v. Brettell, No. 6, ante, the criterion is, not the material obtained, but the mode in which it is obtained (MALINS, V.-C.).—CLEVELAND (DOWAGER DUCHESS) v. MEYRICK (1867), 37 L. 11. Mine extending over property of several owners—Whether each property a "mine."]—One mine may extend over the properties of twenty different owners; & in my opinion each property may be a "mine" (MELLOR, J.).—VAN MINING CO. v. LLANIDLOES OVERSEERS (1876), 1 Ex. D. 310; 45 L. J. M. C. 138; 34 L. T. 692; 40 J. P. 598.

12. What "mine" includes—Depends on intention.]—(1) I cannot help thinking that the true text of what are mines & minerals in a grant was suggested by JAMES, L.J., in Heat v. Gill, No. 41, post, & although the Lord Justice held himself bound by authority so that he yielded to the technical sense which had been attributed to those words I still think (to use his language) that a grant of "mines & minerals" is a question of fact "what these words meant in the vernacular of the mining world, the commercial world, & landowners," at the time when they were used in the instrument (LORD HALSBURY, C.).

"Mines" & "minerals" are not definite terms; they are susceptible of limitation or expansion, according to the intention with which they are used (LORD WATSON).

The meaning of the word "mines" is not, I think, open to doubt. In its primary signification it means underground excavations or underground workings. . . . When used of unopened mines in connection with a particular mineral it means little more than veins or seams or strata of that mineral. . . . The word "minerals" undoubtedly may have a wider meaning than the word "mines." In its widest signification it probably means every inorganic substance forming part of the crust of the earth other than the layer of soil which sustains vegetable life (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

(2) In certain cases & for certain purposes a railway co. may enter upon lands containing brick earth & use that brick earth, although the land may not be delineated in the deposited plans, & although the powers of the co. to take lands compulsorily may have expired. . . . Neither railway cos. nor persons who construct waterworks require mines as such or are capable of working mines for profit (LORD MACNAGHTEN).—GLASGOW CORPN. v. FARIE (1888), 13 App. Cas. 657; 58 L. 26. —— ——.]—(1) In 1829 land was conveyed by J. in fee to T., reserving all mines of coal, culm, iron, & all other mines & minerals whatsoever, except stone quarries, with power to work the same, & make roads & other works, but the surface not to be disturbed without the surface owner's consent, except for making one road & one sewer, & J. making compensation for all damage. The N. guardians, with consent of the owner of the land, made a sewer passing through a bed of brick earth & clay:—Held: J., the mineral owner, was owner of the brick earth & clay, & entitled to compensation from the N. guardians.

(2) The conveyance is of all the lands, tenements, & hereditaments mentioned in the schedule, & if there were no reservation, that would carry all the minerals within the ambit (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

(3) A quarry is a thing which is worked in that way [by taking away the surface] & not by sinking a shaft. . . . But we have here to construe the word "minerals" rather than "mines." Is the word "minerals" which comes after the word "mines," to be controlled by it? That was one of the matters which MELLISH, L.J. discussed & ruled upon in Hext v. Gill, No. 41, post, & I do not understand that it is disputed that on that point he was entirely right when he said that the authorities show that the word "mines" coming before "minerals" does not restrict the sense of the latter (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

(4) It seems to me, therefore, that the rule laid down in Hext v. Gill, No. 41, post, is a rule which arises directly from the character of the transaction, & is a sound rule of construction unless there is something in the context to throw light upon & alter it (BOWEN, L.J.).—JERSEY (EARL) v. NEATH POOR LAW UNION GUARDIANS (1889), 22 Q. 41. Ordinary commercial meaning assigned.] —By a deed executed in 1799, the lord of a manor granted certain copyholds in fee, reserving all mines & minerals within & under the premises, with full liberty of ingress, egress, & regress to & for the grantor, his heirs, etc., to dig & search for, & to take, use, & work the excepted mines & minerals:—Held: kaolin or china clay was a mineral within the reservation; the grantor was not entitled to get the china clay, inasmuch as it could be got only in a manner utterly destructive of the surface, & as the deed did not clearly reserve to him power to destroy the surface, & did not contain any provision for making compensation for injury done to the surface.

The word "minerals" includes every fossil substance, every substance, in fact, of every kind which can be got from underneath the surface & for a profitable purpose. . . . The word "minerals" includes everything which can be got under the surface of the earth for the purpose of profit, unless there is something in the context or in the nature of the transaction which would induce the ct. to give it a more limited meaning (MELLISH, L.J.).

When an owner of both mines & minerals sells the surface, & reserves the minerals & gives himself power to get minerals, he ought to frame his power in such language, if he intends to destroy the surface, that the ct. ought to be able to say that that is clearly the intention of the parties (MELLISH, L.J.).

The long & uniform series of authorities appear to me to have established a very convenient & consistent system, giving the mineral owner every reasonable profit out of the mineral treasures & at the same time saving the landowner's practical enjoyment of his house, gardens, fields & woods without which the grant to him would have been illusory. But for these authorities I should have thought that what was meant by "mines & minerals" in such a grant was a question of fact what these words meant in the vernacular of the mining world & commercial world & landowners at the end of the last century (JAMES, L.J.).

The authorities seem to show that where there is an exception of "mines & minerals," the putting the word "mines" before "minerals" does not restrict the meaning of the word "minerals" (MELLISH, L.J.).—HEXT v. GILL (1872), 7 Ch. App. 699; 41 L. J. Ch. 761; 27 L. T. 291; 20 W. R. 957, L. JJ.

43. ——.] — In the first place, I think it is clear that by the words "or other minerals" exceptional substances are designated, not the ordinary rock of the district. In the second place, I think that in deciding whether or not in a particular case exceptional substances are minerals, the true test is that laid down by LORD HALSBURY in Glasgow Corpn. v. Farie, No. 12, ante. The ct. has to determine "what these words meant in the vernacular of the mining world, the commercial world, & landowners" at the time when the purchase was effected, & whether the particular substance was so regarded as a mineral (LORD LOREBURN, C.).

The purpose of profit may have a bearing upon the question whether certain substances have been recognised as included in the term "minerals," but does not necessarily determine that they have been ordinarily understood to be so included (LORD GORELL).—NORTH BRITISH RY. 46. —— Substances obtained by mining or quarrying.]—By an inclosure Act, passed in 1812, certain common lands in Wales were allotted, an allotment being made to the king as lord of the manor in respect of his right to the soil. The Act gave the Comrs. of Woods & Forests the right to sell the allotment made to the king, subject to the rights of the king to the "mines, ores, minerals, coal, limestone or matter whatsoever" in or under the same; & contained a proviso reserving to the king his rights to any "mines, ores, minerals, coal, limestone or slate" in the common land, & all rights & royalties previously belonging to the king, & gave a right of compensation to the owners of the land for any damage done in digging, raising, & carrying away such mines, etc.:—Held: the word "minerals" included granite, & the Crown was entitled to win the granite by open workings.

The many cases which have been cited go to establish the definition, especially the cases of A.-G. for Isle of Man v. Mylchreest, No. 52, post, & Hext v. Gill, No. 41, ante, where MELLISH, L.J., states the result of the authorities.

50. —— —— Statutory reservation of minerals.]—The principles governing cases like Hext v. Gill, No. 41, ante, which deal with a reservation of minerals by virtue of a grant or contract, are not applicable to the determination of cases arising out of a statutory reservation of minerals, like that contained in Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 77.

(2) Though a mineral primâ facie includes anything lying under the land which has a value of its own as being capable of being used independently of the land, yet that rule may be modified by the circumstances of the case where the mineral in question is accepted only by virtue of a statutory reservation.—GREAT WESTERN RY. 52. —— ——.]—It was contended for the Crown that the word "minerals" . . . comprehended clay & sand. Doubtless, the word in its scientific & widest sense may include substances of this nature &, when unexplained by the context or by the nature & circumstances of the transaction, or by usage, where evidence of usage is admissible, would, in most cases, do so. But the word has also a more limited & popular meaning, which would not embrace such substances, & it may be shown by any of the above-mentioned modes of explanation that in the particular instrument to be construed, it was employed in this narrower sense (SIR MONTAGUE SMITH).—A.-G. 60. Question of law.]—(1) Many of the best-known minerals are mixtures of a large variety of different minerals if that word be used in its strict mineralogical sense, but that does not prevent the well-known mixture being in the eye of the law a mineral (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.).

(2) I cannot entertain any doubt as to china clay being a mineral. . . . 62. Artificial formations — Mounds of refuse.]—Pltf. demised coal & iron mines to a co., which, in manufacturing iron from ironstone, produced large quantities of refuse, consisting principally of protoxide of iron & silica, called "tap cinder" or "puddlers' taps." This refuse, which was at the time unsaleable, was thrown on the demised land & accumulated in large mounds. On the determination of the lease pltfs. demised the land & minerals to defts., who only worked the coal, & did not add to the mounds. Afterwards defts. purchased the "stores & other effects" on the land from pltfs. The tap cinder in the meantime had acquired a commercial value, & large quantities of it were sold by defts.:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to the mounds & to an account of the proceeds of sale, inasmuch as the mounds, although they might have been removed by the co. during its lease, were not chattels passing under the sale of the stores & effects, & were not iron, or ironstone mines, seams, veins, or beds, opened or unopened, or minerals within defts.' lease.

What is leased is, first, the coal, then the ironstone, & then "all mines, seams, veins, & beds, as well opened as unopened, of all other minerals & clay lying & being within & under the lands from the surface down to & including the silver mine." In my opinion this description applies only to what may be called natural formations in & on the land, not to artificial formations such as these mounds (BIGHAM, J.).—BOILEAU v. HEATH, [1898] 2 Ch. 301; 67 L. J. Ch. 529; 78 L. T. 622; 46 W. R. 602.

63. Brick earth.]—The holder of a building lease, where minerals are reserved has a right to dig foundations for buildings about to be erected, & dispose of the materials dug out, but not to do so in order to improve the surface as a building site.

The lessee of a coal mine, under covenant to remove the spoil-bank at the end of his term, was held to have a property in the material of the bank, so as to have a right of action against a stranger removing part of it for brick making.

The right to dig for, work, raise, & get the R. Mine carried with it the right to remove & appropriate such portions of the strata as had to be removed either in making the necessary shafts & other workings to win it or in getting the coal itself when won (NORTH, J.).

In the case of Midland Ry. Co. v. Chechley (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 19, in which a sect. was found in an Act of Parliament very like the exception in the present case, LORD ROMILY pointed out that such words would include every species of mineral which was within the land as distinguished from under it, & would include surface-working as well as mining; & I take the same view as to the words of exception here (NORTH, J.).—ROBINSON v. MILNE (1884), 53 L. 65. Brine.] —Defts. owned land on & in which were two vertical shafts used by them for the purpose of pumping to the surface natural brine, i.e. water which had become fully saturated with salt in solution. The brine so pumped up was put by deft. to commercial use. It was impossible to ascertain whence the brine had come or where its saturation had taken place, but as there were no surface subsidences within defts.' land the inference was that the brine did not come from & had not been saturated within the boundaries of defts.' land:—Held: the brine was a "mineral" within Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 20, & the mineral rights duty was therefore payable by defts. on the rental value of the rights so to work the brine.—A.-G. v. SALT UNION, LTD., [1917] 2 K. 70. Flints—Not when lying on surface.] —Pltf. agreed to let to deft., on an agricultural lease, a farm in the chalk district of Surrey, reserving to the lessor "all mines & minerals." Deft. entered under the agreement, & in the course of husbandry turned up by the plough large quantities of flint stones, which he collected, carried away, & sold; alleging the existence of a local custom permitting to agricultural tenants in the district such carrying away & selling:—Held: the reservation of "all mines & minerals" to the lessor was not sufficient to exclude the custom; but in the absence of any proved custom, the reservation of "minerals" to the lessor would include flint stones turned up by the plough.

Considering, then, the peculiarity of the wording, considering the position of the parties & the nature of the custom, it seems to me that the word "minerals" was not intended to be used in such a sense as to cover those flints to which the custom related, though it might include flints not got according to the custom (JESSEL, M.R.).—TUCKER v. LINGEE (1882), 21 Ch. 91. — — — Effect of abandonment.]—(1) It is always a question of degree, to be established by evidence, whether the working of a mine which has not been formerly worked is waste or not. A tenant for life, though impeachable for waste, may properly work an open mine. A mine not worked for twelve months or two years previously to the tenant for life coming into possession must still be considered as an open mine; but a mine which has not been worked for a hundred years cannot be properly so treated. A mine which has not been worked for twenty or thirty years from the loss of profit attending the working, may, without committing waste, be worked again by a succeeding tenant for life; but if the working of the mine has been abandoned by the owner of the inheritance many years previously, with a view to some permanent advantage to the property, it is doubtful whether a succeeding tenant for life could properly treat that as an open mine. The opening of a fresh pit, also, may not, under some circumstances, amount to the opening of a new mine, but only to the more advantageous working of an old one, & may possibly be done without any injury to the inheritance, if the surface of the land, where it has been opened, was of little or no value to the estate.

(2) Semble: if a tenant for life commit waste, the produce does not belong absolutely to the first tenant in tail in esse while there is a possibility of prior tenants in tail coming into esse.

(3) Semble: the tenant for life may work abandoned mines where the previous working has been stopped merely from inability to carry it on at a profit, secus, if stopped with a view to the permanent advantage of the estate.—BAGOT v. BAGOT, LEGGE v. LEGGE (1863), 32 Beav. 509: 2 New Rep. 297; 33 L. 92. — — —.]—By ante-nuptial contract of marriage dated 1882 in English form, G., the absolute owner of the estate of C, bound herself to convey, & did convey, her estate to trustees. The settlement contained the usual power of sale, & in the meantime the trustees were to lease the unsold parts, & to hold the net proceeds of such sales as well as net rents & profits of the estate until sold, upon trusts thereinafter declared "with such powers of leasing the land & hereditaments & other powers of leasing the lands & hereditaments & other powers necessary & expedient in the execution of the trust." The trusts were declared, & it was provided that until the estate should be sold the trustees were to apply the rents & profits to the persons & for the purposes to which the annual income of the money arising from the sale of the estate would be paid under the trust. Under the trust the annual income of the proceeds of the sale of the estate was to be paid to G., during her life & after her death to her husband, & after their deaths the trustees were to hold the trust premises & the annual income thereof for the children of the marriage as the parents should appoint. There was one child of the marriage. Stone quarries on a portion of the estate had been worked at intervals for about a century; but during 1882 & for four years before 1882 no quarries had been worked. In 1895, the estate not having been sold, the trustees leased the stone in 45 acres, including the portion already worked at a fixed rent with a royalty on the amount of stone sold:—Held: the quarries at the date of the marriage settlement were "opened mines" & the rent & royalty fell to be paid to G. as annual income from the estate, & did not fall to be accumulated for the benefit of the child of the marriage.—GREVILLE-NUGENT v. MACKENZIE, [1900] A. 98. — — — Same seam of coal—Effect of intervening strip of land.]—An estate settled by the will of testator comprised two pieces of land separated by a narrow intervening strip of land which belonged to different owners. Under the whole of the lands there was a valuable seam of coal. The piece of land on the north side of the strip had been demised by the settlor to a colliery co., who had worked the coal. The piece of land on the south side of the strip had not been demised by the settlor, nor had the coal thereunder been worked in any way; but it appeared that if the intervening strip had belonged to testator the coal could have been worked from the pit or shaft sunk by the colliery co. On a petition by the tenant for life under the will for the sanction of the ct., under Settled Estates Act, 1877 (c. 18), to a proposed mining lease of a portion of the land on the south side of the strip:—Held: by reason of the intervention of the strip of land, the mine to be leased must be deemed to be a separate unopened mine, & therefore three-fourths of the rent under the lease must be set aside & invested.—Re MAYNARD'S SETTLED ESTATE, [1899] 2 Ch. 347; 68 L. 100. What constitutes opening a new mine—Not working new seams—By old shaft.]—Testator demised all the seams of coal under his estate, but only two seams were worked or known of in his life. After his death, a lower seam was discovered which could only be worked by a new shaft. A new lease being granted after testator's death:—Held: the tenant for life under his will was entitled to the annual profits arising from the new seam.

If there be one shaft by which you can work five seams, & which are all let, but only one is worked at first, I am of opinion, that when the lessee begins to work the other seams it cannot be said to be opening a new mine. . . . I agree, that if a man has opened a shaft for mining coal & he finds in another part of his estate mines of lead or ironstone, which could not be got by means of the old shaft or opening, this would be opening a new mine (ROMILLY, M.R.).—SPENCER v. SCURR (1862), 31 Beav. 334; 31 L. 107. "Development"—Stage between prospecting & mining proper.]—According to the judgment of the Chief Justice the word "development," in its ordinary meaning as applied to mines, "denotes that stage of work on mineralised ground which intervenes between prospecting & mining proper. First the ground is prospected in order to ascertain whether there are minerals in paying quantities. Then it is developed in order to test whether the minerals which have been found are such as to warrant the working of the property as a mining proposition. When that has been established, the property is actually worked & the minerals are extracted" (LORD ATKINSON).—DOUGLAS v. BAYNES, [1908] A. C. 477; 78 L. J. P. C. 13; 99 L. T. 599; 24 T. L. Suppose a vein of coal actually working, but almost worn out; but that by sinking lower & erecting a fire-engine, a considerable quantity of coal might be got at. That would be a speculation of profit & loss. If the fire-engine was large, which would occasion a considerable expense, some of them having cost £5,000 or £6,000, the heir might think it most for his interest to have a sum of money laid out to free the colliery; & the personal representative would oppose that. But suppose the expense would be very inconsiderable, then it would be the interest of the heir to oppose the erection of the fire engine, for there would be the coals for him some time or other untouched; but it would be the interest of the personal representative to press it on; because by laying out a small sum, there would be a considerable increase of annual profits (LORD LOUGHBOROUGH, C.).—OXENDEN v. COMPTON (LORD) (1793), as reported in 2 Ves. 69; 30 E. By an Inclosure Act comrs. were empowered to divide & allot the lands to the parties interested, but it was disputed whether they had the power to separate the minerals from the surface. In 1770 they made an award, giving the surface to P. & the mines to H., & a covenant was added to which P. & H. were parties, whereby P. disclaimed all right to the mines, & H. agreed to hold the mines according to the award, & to work them without molesting the owner of the surface, & without being subject to any action for damage on account of working them by reason of the surface being injured. 141. Property primâ facie in Crown—Mine under foreshore.]—The question is whether pltf. is entitled to recover damages as reversioner, in respect of coals under the river Dee, that might have been gotten, but for the act of deft. in drowning the mine. Now the lease put in, made by pltf. to H. & co., clearly does not extend to these coals, for it demised only the coals under the land beneath the head of the river Dee, not covered by it. No evidence whatever was given as to the title of pltf. to the land covered by the river Dee, or to the coal under it. Primâ facie the title would be in the Crown, for it appears that the river Dee is in that part of it an estuary where the tide flows & reflows (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).—HANMER v. EYTON (1845), 5 L. 171. —— —— Entry under conveyance of unworked minerals.]—D. & H. agreed between themselves, in writing, to purchase lands then in the market. By this agreement D. was to have the surface at three-fourths, & H. the minerals at one fourth of the whole purchase-money. H. afterwards entered into a contract with the owner of the lands to purchase them from him. The said lands were duly conveyed to D. by the owner thereof, H. being a party to the purchase deed, & executing a release of all his interest in the lands to D. Afterwards, by an indenture of July 12, 1834, D. granted, bargained, & sold to H. his exors., administrators & assigns, all the minerals lying under the said lands, upon terms substantially the same as those contained in the previous agreement between D. & H. The said indenture of July 12, 1834, was not enrolled as a bargain & sale, & there was no livery of seisin to make it operate as a feoffment. There were seven seams of coals & minerals lying under the said lands, & soon after the execution of the last mentioned deed, H. began to work & get the coal under the said lands, & continued so to do between the years 1834 & 1844. He did not, however, go below the two first seams of coal, & on his ceasing to work in 1844, H. left tramways, implements etc., in the tunnels & levels he had made. In 1855, H. by deed, conveyed the minerals, except the two first or upper seams, with power to dig for & get the coal, etc., to pltfs., who shortly afterwards entered, & bored down below the two first seams, in order to try for, but they did not work the coal. D. died in 1848, & in 1857, his devisee & heir-at-law, by deed, granted the said lands, except the coal thereunder theretofore sold & conveyed to H., to S., "subject as to the beds, etc., of coal under the same to the said indenture of July 12, 1834." In 1872, S. granted a lease of the coal under the said lands to defts., & they entered & worked, & got coal under the said lease in 1872. On Jan. 1, 1873, the surviving trustee for sale of D. granted & confirmed unto S. (deft. lessor) & his heirs, all the seams & beds of coal lying under the said lands, "subject to such right or interest as legally passed to H., his exors., administrators, or assigns, under the said indenture of July 12, 1834." H. died in 1861:—Held: pltfs., through H., had sufficient possession of all the seams of coal, etc., to entitle them to maintain trespass against defts., who were mere wrong-doers, for intruding upon pltfs.' mines; the deed of July 12, 1834, & the possession taken under it by H., operated to make H. tenant at will to D. of the mines; Stat. Limitations began to run from the first year of such tenancy, & had given pltfs. a good title when the trespasses were committed.

It is true that in cases where a man has entered upon & taken possession of one seam of coal & by lapse of time has acquired some title to it, the law will not assume that his possession extends to all the other seams of coal lying under that particular one; but in the case we have before us it was beyond all doubt intended that H. should have possession, & take possession of all the seams. The agreement clearly shows that (LORD CAIRNS, C.).

I have had some doubt, in the course of argument, as to the operation of the Stat. Limitations in this case. According to "Shepherd's Touchstone," the grant to get mines is an incorporeal hereditament. My doubt is, if the statute would run, as the grantee would not be entitled to bring an ejectment, during that period, for an incorporeal hereditament. I quite agree that H. obtained possession of the mines, & it is equally clear that he gave possession to pltfs. At the time of the trespasses the defts. were mere wrong-doers, in my opinion, the minerals having been excepted from the conveyance of Mar. 28, 1857, &, therefore, pltfs. were entitled to bring trespass against them (MELLISH, L.J.).—LOW MOOR CO. v. STANLEY COAL CO., LTD. 172. —— —— Title founded on adverse possession.]—LOW MOOR CO. v. STANLEY COAL CO., LTD., No. 171, ante.

173. ——]—Where title is founded on an adverse possession the title will be limited to that area of which actual possession has been enjoyed & as a general rule constructive possession of a wider area will only be inferred from actual possession of the limited area, if the inference of such wider possession is necessary to give effect to contractual obligations, or to preserve the good faith & honesty of a bargain.

Pltfs. who were together entitled to one undivided one-sixth part of the mines under a mountain of ninety-two acres, brought an action against defts., who was admittedly entitled to another undivided one-sixth part of the same mines, & asked for an account of the coal worked by him. It was proved in evidence that more than twelve years before the commencement of the action the predecessors in title of deft., under licences from the owners of the other four-sixths of the mines, but without the licence of pltfs. had commenced to work out the coal under the mountain from an area of two acres, & had remained in possession of that worked-out area, or cavity, ever since. Deft. claimed that possession of part of the mine entitled him to constructive possession of the whole area of the mine horizontally & vertically under the mountain:—Held: deft., having been in adverse possession of pltfs.' one-sixth part, which must be treated as a separate tenement, for more than the required statutory period, had acquired a good title under Stat. Limitations to the two acre area of which his predecessors had been in actual possession, & no more; therefore, pltfs. were entitled to an account of the coal, except that taken from the two acre area, such account to be limited to six years before action brought.

The line of authorities . . . seems to me to establish that where title is founded on an adverse possession the title will be limited to that area of which actual possession has been enjoyed, & that as a general rule constructive possession of a wider area will only be inferred from actual possession of the limited area, if the inference of such wider possession is necessary in order to give effect to contractual obligations, or to preserve the good faith & honesty of a bargain (EVE, J.).—GLYN v. HOWELL, [1909] 1 Ch. 666; 78 L. J. Ch. 391; 100 L. T. 324; 53 Sol. Jo. 269.

174. —— —— Mines under foreshore in Scotland.]—The right of a proprietor of estates adjoining the sea to work the coal below low-water mark was challenged by the Crown during the proprietor's minority. The estates to which the minor had succeeded consisted in part of entailed & in part of unentailed lands. The administration of the unentailed lands was vested in the testamentary trustees of the minor's father, who were also curators of the minor. These trustees, without the concurrence of the minor, entered into a transaction with the Crown whereby they on their part accepted a lease of the whole coal below low-water mark ex adverso of both the entailed & unentailed lands, & the Crown agreed not to claim damages in respect of coal which had been worked in the past. After the proprietor came of age, he accepted an assignment of the lease, & subsequently applied for & obtained from the Crown a reduction of the royalty payable under the lease, & a modification of the whole mode of working the coal. When the proprietor so acted in regard to the lease, he was unaware that he had a claim to some of the coal below low-water mark. In an action brought by the proprietor fourteen years after he had reached majority, concluding (inter alia) for a declarator that he was not bound by the lease: Held: the actings of the proprietor after he came of age barred him from challenging the lease.—LORD ADVOCATE v. WEMYSS, [1900] A. Deft. put in evidence the ct. rolls which recorded a presentment dated in 1695, that the freeholders of the manor had a right of getting stone from the waste to be used & spent on their respective tenements:—Held: the entry on the rolls was admissible, & was good evidence of the alleged custom, & such a custom was not unreasonable.

What amounts to abandonment.]—By a colonial Act cts. for mining purposes are constituted, composed of a warden & assessors, & it is provided by sect. 193 that a minute of the decision of the assessors shall be entered in the register, & that the warden shall make an order in accordance therewith. Applts. occupied land in Victoria for mining purposes, & obtained a Crown lease of the land. A small part of the land occupied by applts. was omitted from the lease. Resps. took possession of so much of the land as was not included in the lease. Applts. then sued resps. in the ct. of mines to remove them & to recover damages. A majority of the assessors found that resps. had not encroached on the land. This finding was not entered in the register, nor did the warden make any order in accordance therewith:—Held: intentional abandonment is only to be proved by cogent evidence of the existence of such intention, & the fact that the lease did not include all the land occupied by applts. was not sufficient evidence of abandonment.—WALHALLA GOLD MINING CO. v. MULCAHY (1871), 40 L. 191. —— —— —— A. by a voluntary settlement conveyed two shares in certain mines to trustees for ninety-nine years if A. should so long live, in trust for A.'s brother-in-law B. during the said term if he should so long live, with remainder as to one share in trust for A.'s sister C., & as to the other share, in trust, for D. the son of B. & C., to hold to them respectively for the residue of the said term if they should so long respectively live. Upon the death of B., in the lifetime of A., C. & D. entered into possession of their respective shares. A. afterwards, by a deed of gift executed in 1826, conveyed all his remaining interest in the premises to D., & died in 1830. After A.'s death, C. continued by mistake in possession of the share which had been settled upon her until her death in 1835. In 1839, D., upon examination of the deed of 1826 which was in his possession, found out the mistake, & he immediately filed his bill against the exors. of C. for an account of the rents & profits received by her since the death of A.:—Held: inasmuch as D. had been guilty of laches in not finding out the mistake earlier, by the means which were in his power, he was entitled to an account only for the period allowed by analogy to Stat. Limitations, which in this case was six years before the filing of the bill, & an additional period during which he was abroad.

Where the rents of mines are reserved by means of payment of produce in specie, the profits will be considered as accruing to the lessor at the time of receiving such produce, & not at the time of the sale of it; & therefore the statute will run from the time of such receipt, & not from the time of such sale.

There can be no ouster between tenants in common in possession; & therefore if one takes more than his share of the rents, the only remedy is account; either by action under the statute of Anne or by bill in equity.—DENYS v. SHUCKBURGH (1840), 4 Y. & C. Ex. 42; 5 Jur. 21; 160 E. R. 912.

This certainly would throw a difficulty in the way of a sale by auction . . . whereas it does not show that similar difficulties would exist in the case of a sale by private contract. . . . It was simply the case of part owners of a mine without any partnership, under which circumstances the doctrine laid down by LORD EDON in the case of Jeffereys v. Smith, No. 198, post, would apply . . . namely, that where such part owners cannot agree on a plan for working the mine, the ct. will take care that it shall be worked in a reasonable way, & it will interfere, I apprehend, till a sale takes place, just as much as if the mine were to be carried on perpetually, & with that object will appoint a manager to act under the direction of the ct. Nor, even in a suit to dissolve the partnership, will the ct. appoint a receiver on an interlocutory application, merely upon evidence that the partners do not co-operate in the management of the business; but to sustain such an application it must be shown that one partner has interfered so as to prevent the business being carried on.

It is certainly not the ordinary practice of this ct. to direct an account between partners, except upon a bill for the dissolution of the partnership concern. It is true, that it is not now necessary to ask for a dissolution in every case in which relief is sought respecting partnership affairs; but I apprehend, that, where a bill seeks for an account, that is one of the cases in which a dissolution must be prayed. Unless some special ground is raised, the general accounts cannot be taken without asking for a dissolution of the firm (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).

C. Partners.

(a) In General.

See, generally, PARTNERSHIP.

205. Mining partnership distinguished from ordinary partnership.]—Mines are, for many purposes, partnership property. They are liable to the debts of the partnership & debts to the co-partnership; & notwithstanding the bkpcy. of a partner indebted to the co-partnership, the accounts are to be taken beyond the time of the bkpcy., & up to the time of the sale; the debts of the partnership are first to be satisfied, & out of the bkpt.'s share repayment is to be made to the co-partnership of what is due to it from him.

The general principle is, that all property, acquired for the purpose of a trading concern, whether it be of a personal or real nature, is to be considered as partnership property, & is to be first applied accordingly in satisfaction of the demands of the partnership. It is true a mining concern differs in some particulars from a common partnership the shares are assignable & the death or bkpcy. of the holder of shares does not operate as a dissolution; but it has been repeatedly held to be in the nature of a trading concern (LEACH, M.R.).—FEREDAY v. WIGHTWICK (1829), Taml. 250; 1 Russ. & M. 45; 48 E. tenants, or tenants in common, of a colliery, one party can compel another to sell his share & dissolve the concern previously to taking the account (LORD ABINGER, C.B.).

208. —— Money borrowed for partnership purposes—Payment of wages.]—As it is not according to the usual course of business for the manager of a mine to borrow moneys for the purpose of carrying on the mine, where money is lent to the managers of a mine the party lending must look to the power of borrowing with which the manager is invested, & can recover over only against the parties who have authorised the borrowing; but, as wages must become due to the miners, & goods must be bought upon credit by the managers of the mine, the shareholders are therefore considered to have authorised the manager to have incurred such expenses & debts.

Where a partner in a trade has duly & properly advanced money of his own for the purposes of the partnership business, so as to become justly a creditor in account with the partnership for the amount, an implied contract is raised by mercantile usage & the general course of trade dealings for interest, so as to entitle the partner making the advance to have his account with the firm credited with interest accordingly although his partners may not have authorised & may not have known of the transaction—at least in the absence of any express contract to the contrary.—Re GERMAN MINING CO., Ex p. CHIPPENDALE (1853), 4 De G. The co-partners, in their defence to his suit, alleged that the managing partner had wilfully & knowingly trespassed upon the adjoining colliery, but failed to prove that allegation:—Held: as no additional costs had been occasioned by the allegation, pltf. could not be relieved from any part of the costs.—THOMAS v. ATHERTON (1878), 10 Ch. C., H., & B., jointly carried on the works for two years after testator's death, selling iron manufactured by them not only from ore procured from testator's mines, but from ore & old wrought iron which they purchased, but not merely for the purpose of mixing with the produce of testator's mines for improving the iron. C. at the end of two years, purchased B.'s share, & the business was carried on in the same manner by C. & H. till H. died. There was no written or other agreement for the duration of the partnership :—Held : this was not a mere joint interest in the produce of land, but a trading partnership ; it was dissolved by the death of H., & the fact of C. & H. having purchased & taken assignments to a trustee for themselves, of some of the rents reserved by the leases, did not furnish any inference of an agreement to continue the partnership for any definite period ; & a sale of the property was ordered on motion.

It seems difficult to establish that this is an interest in land, distinct from a partnership in trade, a mere interest in land, in which partition could take place (LORD ELDON, C.).—CRAWSHAY v. MAULE, MAULE v. CRAWSHAY (1818), 1 Wils. Ch. 181 ; 1 Swan. 495 ; 37 E. R. 79, L. C.

220. Right to dissolve—Partnership at will—Burden of proof.]—Pltf. was lessee of seams of coal for a term of years & had abandoned the working of the upper seams as unprofitable. In 1815 he entered into partnership for working the upper seams with deft., his colliery manager. In 1857 the upper seams having been worked as far as could be done from the existing pits, deft., with the privity & approbation of pltf., sunk a new pit at considerable expense, which was defrayed out of the partnership moneys. In 1858, differences having arisen, pltf. gave deft. notice to dissolve the partnership, which notice deft. refused to receive, insisting that the understanding had been that the partnership should continue for the whole duration of the lease. The new pit was only just finished. No express agreement as to the duration of the partnership was proved :—Held : the burden of establishing that there was more than a partnership at will lay upon deft., & in the absence of such proof pltf. was entitled to dissolve the partnership at his pleasure, & deft. could not claim any interest in the seams of coal.—BURDON v. BARKUS (1862), 4 De G. 221. Appointment of receiver.]—By the deed of partnership of a colliery, it was amongst other things provided that if additional capital should be required to carry on the works it should be contributed in proportion to the shares which each partner had in the partnership. The working of the mine had been unsuccessful & it required further capital to carry on the works. A notice to the bankers had been given by one of the partners that he should not hold himself liable for any further advances to be made by them on account of the partnership, and he refused to contribute any further capital as stipulated by the co-partnership deed. On bill filed by some of the other partners praying for the usual accounts to be taken, & for a receiver & manager to conduct the concerns of the partnership & for a dissolution, if necessary :—Held : pltfs. were entitled to a receiver & manager until the hearing.—MARSDEN v. KAYE (1857), 30 L. it. The coal & ironstone therein lay in eight seams. Two of the seams had not been actually worked, though a cross-heading passed through one of them. Testator, since he purchased the property, had expended a large sum in providing new machinery, & had put working capital to a larger amount into the business. The question was, whether pltf. was entitled as tenant for life under the will, to work for his own benefit all seams of coal & ironstone comprised in the freehold portion of the colliery:—Held: the whole course of dealing with the property indicated an intention on the part of the owner to treat all the seams as mines which were opened, therefore, all the eight seams of coal, including the two which had not been actually worked, were to be treated as opened at the time of testator's death; this view was confirmed by the words of the will, which not only showed that all the seams were treated as one commercial entity, but also got over the difficulty arising from the fact that the freehold & leasehold parts were differently dealt with in the will, a conclusion which was fortified by the powers thereby conferred on the trustees.

Everyone agrees nowadays that the question whether a mine is an "opened" mine or not an "opened mine" when one is dealing with the question of the rights of any person who has a life estate in the land, is a question which depends really upon the intention of the settlor or testator (WILLIAMS, L.J.).—CHAYTOR v. TROTTER (1902), 87 L. While B. was such tenant, in 1821, the copyholder in fee granted the mine, for valuable consideration, to B. & P. In 1832 B.'s tenancy from year to year ceased:—Held: before & at the time of the grant of 1821, B. was in possession of the mine by virtue of his tenancy from year to year, though without the right to work the mine; he therefore, by the grant, became possessed of the mine for the term without actual entry; & that his possession enured to the benefit both of himself & P.

At the time when the lease was executed & the term granted by it commenced, B., one of the lessees, was tenant of the farm under which the minerals demised lie. Being in possession of the surface, in point of law he was in possession of the minerals. He had no right to work the minerals. If he had done so it would have been waste; but the lessor could not have sued him in trespass; &, if strangers had worked the minerals even without breaking the surface, B. might have maintained trespass against them. [It has been argued] that inasmuch as testator in his lifetime opened some minerals in some parts of his estate, it is to be assumed that his intention was to open the other minerals in the other parts of his estate & that the consequence of his having opened the minerals in a part of his estate is that there is no difference at all between opened & unopened minerals . . . He then gave the income of the investments to a tenant for life, with remainder, as to the capital, over. Royalties became payable after testator's death. The trustees did not sell for ten years, but allowed the brickfield to be worked out, being of opinion that by holding the land for the present they might sell it at a higher price afterwards for building purposes:—Held: the tenant for life was entitled to the royalties absolutely, & not merely to the income which they would have produced if invested.—MILLER v. MILLER (1872), L. The will contained a trust for sale after the death of the last surviving tenant for life, & a direction that until sale the trustees should cause the real estate to be kept "in good & tenantable order & repair":—Held: the trustees had an implied power to let the brickfield from year to year, & the whole of the rents & royalties must be paid to the tenants for life for the time being.—Re NORTH, GARTON v. CUMBERLAND, [1909] 1 Ch. 625; 78 L. The residue was settled on trusts for tenants for life & remainderman. The trustees under powers in the will granted a mining lease, & retained the leased property unconverted for more than twenty-one years:—Held: (1) the rents & royalties under the mining lease during the twenty-one years ought to be invested, & the income therefrom ought to be invested & accumulated; (2) after the twenty-one years, the tenants for life of settled shares in the residue were entitled to receive out of the rents & royalties such an annual sum as in the opinion of the ct. would under all the circumstances of the case be a fair equivalent for the annual income that would have resulted if the estate had been converted.—WENTWORTH v. WENTWORTH, [1900] A. 274. —— Profits from leasehold collieries included in residuary devise—Enjoyment in specie.]—Testator, seised of real estate, & possessed of leasehold collieries which he was working, by his will devised all his real estate, "& also" all his leasehold estates, "& " all his "goods, chattels, & credits" to three trustees, so that they should have the legal estate, upon trust, as to one moiety for his married daughter for life, not to her separate use, then to her husband, one of the trustees, for life, then to her first son absolutely; & as to the other moiety for his only other child, an unmarried daughter, for her separate use for life, without restraint upon anticipation, then to her children, & in default which happened, upon the trusts of the other moiety. He empowered the married daughter, & her husband, & also the unmarried daughter, to appoint portions to be raised & paid out of his "said real & personal estates respectively." He empowered the unmarried daughter to appoint any part not exceeding one-half of the "rents, issues, & profits, interest, dividends, & annual income" of her moiety during the lifetime of any husband for his use. The trustees were empowered to "levy & raise & pay & apply," for advancement any part or parts of the moieties; & to pay & apply such part as they should think fit of "the income & annual produce" for maintenance. He gave power to the trustees to lease "all or any part" of his "said freehold or leasehold estates" for twenty-one years; to "alter, vary & transpose" the "state of investment of the property," provided that the same should consist of "real estate, securities upon real estate, or shares in the public funds," for which purpose, & also for the purpose of "raising" such sums of money as it might become "necessary to raise in pursuance of the powers," to "sell & convert into money" all or any part of the "said trust estates," or to mortgage the same. He then empowered the trustees, "in case they shall deem it beneficial so to do," to continue the collieries & either to increase or abridge the business thereof, & all losses, costs, charges, & expenses of carrying on the business should be "borne, paid, & defrayed" out of his "real & personal estate," & also to procure any lease of the collieries to be renewed, & to continue the business after such renewal.

Testator died in 1834. The son-in-law was the sole proving exor., & was the only acting trustee until the marriage of the unmarried daughter in 1835, shortly after which date her husband was appointed co-trustee. The trustees continued & enlarged the colliery business for thirty-seven years, taking leases of additional collieries, making large profits, & greatly increasing the value of the plant.

Upon suit by the eldest son of the elder daughter, claiming to have the profits over £4 per cent. on the value of the collieries at the death of testator capitalised, & made to form part of the estate:—Held: there was sufficient indications of intention in the will to exclude the operation of the rule in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth (1802), 7 Ves. 137, & the tenants for life were entitled to the enjoyment in specie of the produce of all the collieries.—THURSBY v. THURSBY (1875), L. R. 19 Eq. 395; 44 L. J. Ch. 289; 32 L. T. 187; 23 W. R. 500.

275. —— Retention of wasting securities by trustees—Rate of interest.]—Interest at 3, & not at 4, per cent., must at the present day be computed in applying the principle of Brown v. Gellatly (1867), L. R. 2 Ch. 751, whereby, when wasting securities, forming part of the residuary estate of a testator given upon trust for conversion, are retained under a power to postpone conversion, the tenant for life is entitled during the period of postponement to interest on the value of the securities.

Where, in such a case, the interest at 3 per cent. is paid out of the actual income of the wasting securities to the tenant for life, & the balance is invested as capital of the estate, the tenant for life is entitled to the income of the invested fund.—Re WOODS, GABELLINI v. WOODS, [1904] 2 Ch. 4; 73 L. 276. —— ——.]—Testator devised & bequeathed all his real & personal estate not by his will otherwise disposed of to trustees upon trust to sell & convert the same, with power to postpone conversion as long as the trustees thought proper & to retain any investments subsisting at his death, whether of the kind thereinafter authorised or not, & out of the proceeds to pay debts & legacies, & at the discretion of the trustees to invest the residue & to stand possessed of the residuary trust moneys & the investments for the time being representing the same, thereinafter called "the residuary trust funds," in trust to pay the income thereof to his wife during her life. At the time of his death testator was possessed of preference & ordinary shares in a coal mining co. The ordinary shares, although not of a wasting character, were not authorised by the investment clause in the will. The trustees therefore sold some of them, & proposed to sell more on a favourable opportunity. They declined to pay to the widow in the meantime the full dividends on the ordinary shares thus retained:—Held: in the absence of any express or implied gift of the income pending conversion, the widow was entitled only to interest at 3 per cent. on the value of the ordinary shares at testator's death, & the rest of those dividends must be invested. This rule was well settled, & applied to unauthorised securities whether they were of a wasting character or not.—Re CHAYTOR, CHAYTOR v. HORN, [1905] 1 Ch. 233; 74 L. J. Ch. 106; 92 L. 277. —— ——.]—By his will testator gave his personal estate to his wife for life & after her death to other persons, & appointed his wife & pltf. trustees of his will. By a codicil testator empowered his trustees to carry on his businesses of a colliery owner & farmer, & gave them a general discretion "to retain any investments" belonging to him at his death without being responsible for any loss occasioned thereby. Testator was a director of a coal co., limited, which had wide powers of engaging in colliery & other businesses under its articles & memorandum of association, & possessed a considerable reserve fund. At the time of his death testator was possessed of three hundred & thirty-six fully paid up shares of £50 each in the coal co., & in pursuance of their power under the codicil the trustees retained them:—Held: the shares were hazardous, but not wasting securities, & the power to retain investments was sufficient to exclude the operation of the rule in Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl) (1802), 7 Ves. 137 a; the tenant for life was therefore entitled to the income of the shares so long as the trustees thought fit to retain them.—Re BATES, HODGSON v. BATES, [1907] 1 Ch. 22; 95 L. 291. Working open mines—By mortgagee in possession—Rights of mortgagee.]—(1) Where a mine or quarry has been opened for a restricted or definite purpose, as to obtain fuel, or the means of repairing a particular tenement on the estate, that would not give the tenant for life, or other owner of an estate impeachable for waste, the right to work it for commercial profit.

(2) The opening of a quarry by a mtgor. in possession enures to the benefit of the mtgee. of a term, so as to render him dispunishable for waste if he work the quarry during the term.

(3) Where it is proved that a quarry was worked, & that there was a lease which would authorise the workings, it will be presumed after a great lapse of time that the workings took place under the lease, & the burden of proof will lie on a party who seeks to show that they were unauthorised.

(4) Sale of the produce is not a necessary criterion of the difference between a mine or quarry which is, & one which is not, to be considered open in a legal sense.

(5) Where there is an open mine or quarry, the sinking of a new pit on the same vein, or breaking ground in a fresh place on the same rock, is not necessarily the opening of a new mine or quarry.—ELIAS v. SNOWDON SLATE QUARRIES CO. 292. —— —— ——.]—The mtgee. of colliery property held under a mining lease is entitled to have a receiver & manager appointed, as such a security involves the right to work the colliery business, & the fact that the mtgee. has taken possession does not deprive him of such right.

301. —— —— —— —— —— —— ——.]—(1) Pltf., being the owner in fee of certain hereditaments with a coal mine underneath, mortgaged the same to defts. L. in fee. Pltf. covenanted to confirm any leases which L. might make, but L. was not authorised to work or lease the mine. Pltf.'s mine was surrounded on all sides by mines in the possession of defts. T. & J. Defts. T. & J., without the knowledge of pltf., asked & obtained leave of L. to explore & work pltf.'s mine. Defts. T. & J., without entering into any lease or agreement, explored & worked the mine, & raised & sold coal to a large amount. On bill by pltf. to redeem:—Held: defts. T. & J. were necessary parties to the suit.

(2) In equity, following Thorneycroft v. Crockett, No. 300, ante, where the subject-matter of the pledge has been abstracted, the mtgee. is liable to be charged for all sums received in respect of the property abstracted & sold, without any deductions.

But upon the whole of this case, looking at pltf. as a mtgor. who comes to have his pledge restored upon an equitable adjustment of rights, looking at all defts., & finding that, through the wrongful & unauthorised acts of defts., the mtgee., the dominion over the mtged. property is asserted, which as between him & the persons to whom he gave the dominion has been abused—as between these parties I must consider both of them liable to the mtgor. . . . it has been said with perfect truth & accuracy by the counsel for deft. L., that the bill twice asserts that he was not mtgee. in possession. That is perfectly true, but the bill at the same time asserts that the coal was wrought & won by defts. T. & J., & this is set forth in a perfectly unambiguous manner; for it says, "that after the discovery that the coal had been worked, the solrs. of pltf. applied to, & had an interview with deft. L. respecting the working of the coal by T. & J., & deft. L. stated that he had never authorised T. & J. to work the coal, & that he did not know that they had done so, but that they had some time before applied to him for leave to work the same, & he had stated to them that he had no objection provided it was wrought under the inspection of C." Now, when I look at the answer of T. & J. & the answer of L., I find a perfect accordance with that statement. It is a fact incontrovertible, that there was the statement on the part of L. to allow defts. T. & J. to work the mine for the purpose of exploring the coal, & by means of that arrangement the property was to be abstracted, for which therefore, as it is acquired by the dealing of a person who has obtained access to the mine by the act of the mtgee., I must hold the mtgee. responsible, & for that purpose there are charges in the bill which charge specifically as against L. the conduct of these people, & seek to make him liable (STUART, V.-C.).—HOOD v. EASTON (1856), 2 Giff. 692; 27 L. The answer to this argument appears to me to depend upon the facts of each particular case. If, in truth, the real object of the colliery was to supply the railway with cheaper coals, it would be proper to allow the accidental additional profit of selling coals to others; but of the principal object of the colliery was to undertake the business of raising & selling coals, then it would be a perversion of the funds of the company (LORD ROMILLY, M.R.).—LYDE v. EASTERN BENGAL RY. 315. ——————.]—I am far from saying that a railway co. ought to be permitted to carry on the trade of ironmasters, or colliery proprietors, or rolling stock manufacturers, not casually, not incidentally, not collaterally, in the bonâ fide conduct of their own property & business, but as really a distinct & separate trade. I can conceive that such a case might be properly considered by the A.-G., & considered by this ct., as a fraud on the legislature which had created & authorised the co. only for what it professed & undertook to do; but, at all events, it must be something great, something substantial, to warrant such interference (JAMES, L.J.).—A.-G. v. GREAT EASTERN RY. SECT. 8.—MINES (WORKING FACILITIES AND SUPPORT) ACT, 1923.

321. Grant of right to work—Consideration of public interest.]—The decision of the ct. in respect of an application in pursuance of Mines (Working Facilities & Support) Act, 1923 (c. 20), for the grant of the right to work certain specific minerals in accordance with the provisions of that statute, is not merely one for agreement between appcts. & objectors; the public interest must also be considered & safeguarded by the ct., &, whatever the terms which any party thinks may be appropriate in his own interest, it is the duty of the ct. to see that both the national interest & the interests of all concerned are protected.—Re NUNNERY COLLIERY CO.'S APPLICATION (1924), 69 Sol. Jo. 52.

322. —— Practice of Railway & Canal Commission.]—The practice of the Railway & Canal Commission is to hear all objectors to applications for the grant of the right to work minerals & then the decide whether the main application should be granted & afterwards insert protective clauses into the minutes to give the objectors the proper legal safeguards to which they are entitled. Where a claim is made to let down the surface the Commission has power to give authority for this being done on giving adequate compensation to any person whose property is likely to be affected by the subsidence.—Re SHEFFIELD COAL CO., LTD. & ASTON COAL CO., LTD. (1925), 42 T. L. R. 8.

323. —— —— Apportionment of royalties.]—Under Mines (Working Facilities & Support) Act, 1923 (c. 20), s. 4 (2), the Railway & Canal Commission will determine the proper division of royalties obtained from coal worked under the Act as between the lord of the manor & copyholders. The ownership of the minerals is in the lord of the manor, the possession in the copyholders. All the facts of the case will be taken into consideration by the commission:—Held: on the particular facts of this case a fair & proper division of the royalty would be two thirds to the lord of the manor & one third to the copyholders; in the absence of special custom the concurrence of both the lord of the manor & the copyholder is necessary before the minerals underlying the copyhold land can be worked & taken away; the commission must apportion the royalties payable by appcts. under Mines (Working Facilities & Support) Act, 1923 (c. 20), on the basis of a willing grantor & a willing grantee.—Re MARKHAM MAIN COLLIERY, LTD. (1925), 134 L. T. 253; 41 T. L. R. 672.

324. —— —— National interest to be considered—Grant in terms of agreement between rival applicants.]—Where rival appcts. for the right to work coal in a certain area agree to divide the area between themselves, the ct. will not make an order in the terms of the agreement unless it is expedient in the national interest so to make it, & the ct. may specify matters in regard to which the agreement must be modified.—Re CHARLESWORTH (J. & J.), LTD. & BRIGGS (HENRY), SON & CO., LTD. (1926), 43 T. L. R. 100.

325. —— —— Comparison of value of & damage to surface works with value of minerals.]—A colliery co. applied to the Railway & Canal Commission under Mines (Working Facilities & Support) Act, 1923 (c. 20), s. 5 (1), (2), (3), to work certain minerals in accordance with the provisions of sect. 1 of that Act. The minerals consisted of three seams of coal the first 110 yards from the surface, the second 145 yards from the surface, & the third 345 yards from the surface. The three seams lay under two parcels of land containing about 20 acres. The minerals were owned in such small parcels as not to be economically workable by themselves. The co. held interests in adjoining coal under various leases. In the case of the deepest seam they had reached a point where working & winning the coal could be commenced almost immediately, but in the case of the two shallow seams the workings were at a distance which would take some ten years to traverse in one case & fifteen or twenty in the other. Across the area, the subject of the application, there was a canal built under an Act of Parliament which threw an obligation on the canal co. to keep the waters of the canal navigable. There was no obligation on the canal co. to keep the water at a fixed level, but in practice, in order to keep the canal navigable, the water could not be allowed to fall below a certain fixed level. The colliery co. claimed the right to let down the surface, & a right of underground wayleave for the purpose of access to or conveyance of minerals. An undertaking was offered by the colliery co. to repair a railway bridge over the canal & to make good any damage done by subsidence. The canal co. objected to the application on the ground that, in spite of the Act of Parliament forming them, they were still entitled to their common law right of lateral support. If the three seams were worked there would be serious damage to the banks & the bed of the canal. If only the deepest of the three seams were worked damage due to the subsidence could be repaired. They, therefore, only objected to the two shallow seams being worked. The mineral owners of the coal underlying the area, the subject of the application, appeared before the Commission on the grounds that they were entitled to royalties in a lump sum or according to the gradual winning of the coal, & that a duty should lie on the colliery co. to endeavour to negotiate privately the purchase of the mineral rights:—Held: (1) in determining whether restrictions should be imposed on the winning of coal in any area, the subject of the application, the Commission will take into consideration the value of any works on the surface & the cost of repairing damage likely to be caused thereto by subsidence, as compared with the value of the minerals, & the importance in the national interest of the preservation of such works as compared with the importance in the national interest of working & winning the coal. In the circumstances the Commission would only grant leave to work the deepest of the three seams; (2) the refusal of the Commission to grant the application, save as to the deepest seam, was not final or res judicata, & the colliery co. could make another application later for the right to work this coal should the conditions change.

The Commission will act as a jury & assess the amount of royalty to be paid to the mineral owners & decide on the method of payment.—Re MANNERS COLLIERY CO., LTD. (1926), 42 T. L. R. 773.

327. Grant of facilities for conveyance & carrying away of coal—Aerial ropeway Over land not comprised in mining lease.]— Under Mines (Working Facilities & Support) Act, 1923 (c. 20), ss. 1 (2), 5 (2), the Railway & Canal Commission has jurisdiction to grant facilities for the conveyance & carrying away of coal over land other than that contained in the ambit of the mining co.'s lease. The Commission, however, refused to sanction a scheme for an aerial ropeway for the conveyance of coal from the Tilmanstone colliery to Dover Harbour, on the grounds that, though a scheme for a ropeway would be put forward which would be feasible & in the national interest, the particular scheme for which sanction was asked was incomplete, & the plans were inaccurate & illusory, & on the evidence the Commission was unable to say whether the arrangements at the Dover end were feasible or in the national interest.—Re TILMANSTONE (KENT) COLLIERIES, LTD.'S APPLICATION (1927), 43 T. By an agreement between some of the partners in a colliery, reciting, that it was apprehended it would be competent for one partner to determine the joint interest & bring the partnership property to sale, & that the death of any partner would have that effect; & that they were desirous that their interests should be so far several, that the share of any partner should be transmissible to his representatives, & that the partnership interest should not be determined, & the entire property sold, without the consent of the majority in value, but each should be competent to sell his own share only; it was agreed that each of them should hold to himself, transmissible to his own representatives or assigns, an aliquot share of certain of the partnership property, & that their joint holding should not be subject to the ordinary terms applying to partnership property so as to entitle any one of them to a sale without the concurrence of such majority, or to dissolve the partnership, or so as to cause a total dissolution of partnership by the death of any one of them:—Held: this was not an agreement by the parties that the representatives of a partner, after his death, should continue partners with the survivors, & contribute to the working of the colliery on their joint account; but was only an agreement that none of the partners or their representatives should be entitled to a sale of more than his own share of the partnership property.—TATAM v. WILLIAMS (1844), 3 Hare, 347; 67 E. 367. —— What sale ordered—Sale by auction.] —Several persons, having obtained a mining lease for sixty years, entered into partnership in "the business of iron ore workers" for that period. The business consisted of winning & selling hematite iron in an unmanufactured state. One of them having become lunatic, the ct. dissolved the partnership & directed the whole concern to be sold by an indifferent person, with liberty to the parties to bid.

By partnership articles between A., B., & C., it was agreed, that, upon the sale by a partner of his share in a mining concern, his co-partners should have a right of pre-emption. A. gave to B. notice of his intention to sell, after which B. became a lunatic, & the option not having been exercised for some time, A. sold to C.:—Held: B.'s right of pre-emption was lost.

I think that the value of the whole must be ascertained by a sale by auction, & that some

A. Express Powers.

(a) In General.

371. Insertion of powers in settlement—Whether "usual powers."]—There is a palpable distinction between inserting in a settlement powers for the management & better enjoyment of the settled estates which are beneficial to all parties, & powers which confer personal privileges on particular parties. . . . But powers of leasing, of sale & exchange, &, where there is any joint property, or there are any mines, or any land put for building purposes, powers of partition, of leasing mines, & of granting building leases, are powers for the general management & better enjoyment of the estates; & such powers are beneficial to all parties (SHADWELL, V.-C.).—HILL v. HILL (1834), 6 Sim. 136; 58 E. R. 545.

372. —— Settlement of personal property—Settlement of subsequently acquired freehold property with similar powers.]—In a settlement of personal property, the parties covenanted to settle all future acquired property upon the same trusts, etc., & subject to the same powers, etc., or as near thereto as the nature & tenure of the property would admit of:—Held: this authorised the insertion of a power to grant mining leases in the settlement of subsequently acquired freeholds, the prior owner having granted such leases, though the mines had never been effectually worked under them. SCOTT v. STEWARD (1859), 27 Beav. 367; 54 E. R. 144.

373. Construction of powers—Powers expressed in general terms—Whether leasing of unopened mines authorised.]—C. granted a lease for twenty-one years to L. & T. of certain mines on his estate. The mines were part of the estate which on the marriage of his son he had settled on that son for life & after the death of such son to secure a jointure on his wife for life with remainder over to the sons of the marriage in tail, with remainder over, with power to the said son to let leases in possession for twenty-one years, reserving the best rent. The son, tenant for life, before the expiration of the first mentioned lease, granted a lease to L. alone of the mines for twenty-six years. L. & T. on the faith of this last mentioned lease incurred expenses. After some years, a bill was filed to set aside the lease as not conforming to the power & as not reserving the most improved rent: Held: the first lease must be presumed to have been surrendered; the second lease would bind the remainderman for twenty-one years; & the rent reserved not being a gross sum for all the mines but separate on each, the power was well executed as to the open mines though not of mines unopened.

The intention of the settlement is clear: as this mine was in lease at the time of the settlement, & twelve years then to come of the term, & must be understood to have been settled for the benefit of all claiming under it, the words "manors, lands, & tenements" well carry the mine (LORD DE GREY, C.J.).—CAMPBELL v. LEACH, LEACH & THOMAS v. CAMPBELL (1775), Amb. 740; 27 E. 374. —— —— —— No leases to be made dispunishable of waste.]—Where a lease of land & the mines thereunder is granted, & there are upon the property open & unopen mines, the lessee cannot work the unopen mines; a fortiori, where a power is given to grant leases of land & the mines, & there are open & unopen mines, the power cannot authorise the granting of a lease of the unopen mines.

A power of leasing hereditaments, etc., in a settlement, contained a clause to the effect that no lessee should be made dispunishable of waste :— Held: the clause alone sufficiently imported that the power did not authorise a lease of an unopen mine.—CLEGG v. ROWLAND (1866), L. 376. —— —— Whether leasing of wayleaves authorised.]—Lessees of wayleaves under a lease, granted by a copyhold tenant in fee of the land, entered into a negotiation for a new lease with the tenant for life under the lessor's will, which gave the tenant for life power of leasing. A correspondence ensued, in the course of which the tenant for life offered to grant a new lease at a certain rent, which offer was accepted by the lessees. The original lease contained a clause usual, if not universal, in the leases in the neighbourhood, giving the lessees the option of determining the lease on notice. The correspondence respecting the new lease was silent as to the insertion of such a clause, but one of the earliest letters alluded to the proposed lease as a renewal of the former :—Held: (1) the lessees might have understood that such a clause was intended to be inserted in the new lease without putting a perverse or absurd construction on the correspondence, &, whether such understanding was correct or incorrect, or was confined or not confined to the lessees, they ought not to be ordered to accept the lease without such a clause; (2) the tenant for life had not, under the will or otherwise, power to grant such a lease, & the reversioner, though able to fulfil the agreement, was not entitled to demand a specific performance of it.—RICKETTS v. BELL (1847), 1 De G. & Sm. 335; 10 L. T. O. S. 105; 11 Jur. 918; 63 E. R. 1093.

377. —— —— Whether grant for term exceeding limited owner's life authorised.]—A gift of a power to lease mines & minerals, following the gift of a life estate in the real property of which they form part, though expressed in general terms, does not of necessity imply a power in the tenant for life to make a lease exceeding the term of his own life. A. devised his estates to his daughter for her life, without impeachment of waste, & then to her issue, male & female, & in default of such issue, over. The will gave the daughter, or any person in possession under the limitations in the will, power to work or to make a lease of the mines. She was to receive & pay over to trustees the rents & profits of the mines, which were to be applied to the purchase of other estates, of which she was to receive the rents for her own life. While in possession she made a lease, reciting the will & granting a term of sixty years :—Held: the lease was not warranted by the power, for that on the whole will it appeared to be the intention of testator to restrict her to making a lease for her own life only.—VIVIAN v. JEGON (1868), L. 378. —— With all usual & necessary "liberties & privileges"—Grant of liberty to erect cottages authorised.]—A power was reserved to a tenant for life to lease collieries & coal mines, together with all such powers, authorities, accommodations, liberties & privileges as shall be necessary, or are usually contained in leases of collieries or mines in the county, place or neighbourhood where the collieries or mines are situate, for seeking, winning, working, drawing, taking & carrying away the coals within & under the same, so as the lessees be not made dispunishable for waste by any express words therein contained. A lease of a coal mine in execution of this power gave power to the lessee & his workmen to seek for, win, work, draw, take & carry away the coal, & also to build & set up in & upon the mines all such enginehouses, machine offices, countinghouses, warehouses, workshops, workmen's cottages, stables, huts, bridges, walls, erections, buildings & accommodations as shall be bonâ fide necessary or proper for or in the due prosecution & carrying on of the said works & premises, with liberty to dig & use stones, slates, & brick earth, & materials required for the collieries & works or buildings thereby authorised :—Held: this lease was not necessarily void as being in excess of the power, but depended on whether the power in the lease was such as was necessary or usually contained in leases of collieries or mines in the neighbourhood.—MORRIS v. RHYDYDEFED COLLIERY CO. (1858), 3 H. & N. 885; 28 L. J. Ex. 119: 32 L. T. O. S. 163; 5 Jur. N. S. 339; 7 W. R. 95; 157 E. R. 726, Ex. Ch.

379. —— Powers authorising building leases & leases of mines with or without surface—Letting of building land with exception of minerals authorised.]—Where under a settlement a tenant for life has power to lease all or any part of the settled lands for building purposes, & also power to lease mines of coal, iron, or other materials, either with or without surface lands, those powers enable him to lease the settled lands for building purposes, reserving the minerals under the lands so leased.—Re RUTLAND'S (DUKE) SETTLED ESTATES, RUTLAND (DUKE) v. BRISTOL (MARQUIS), [1900] 2 Ch. 206; 69 L. J. Ch. 603; 44 Sol. Jo. 484.

(b) Exercise of Powers.

380. Validity—Grant of reversionary lease for ninety-nine years—By way of mortgage.]—(1) In 1843 M., the tenant for life, by a deed reciting the leasing power, in consideration of £6,000 paid to him by C., demised the mines including a mining lease made by testator to E. in 1829, which would expire in 1848, to C. for ninety-nine years at a peppercorn rent, subject to redemption on payment of £6,000 & interest. The deed contained an appointment of a receiver of the rents & royalties payable by the present & future tenants, & did not oblige C. to work the mines; but the tenant for life covenanted to grant, or concur in granting such further leases as C. should require :—Held: this deed was a valid exercise of the power of leasing mines, & created a good legal mtge. for an absolute term of ninety-nine years.

(2) The lease of 1829 contained covenants by the lessee to leave sufficient pillars of coal to support the roof, & these covenants were embodied by reference in the mtge. of 1843. In May, 1850, M. granted to J. as a trustee for S., P. & B. an ordinary mining lease for forty years, subject to a dead rent & royalties, which contained a covenant by the lessee not to remove pillars without the consent of M. or his assigns, or other the persons entitled to the colliery. M. after this conveyed absolutely all his interest in the property to the trustees of his eldest son, who had become entitled in fee in remainder. Afterwards J., with the concurrence of the parties claiming under S., P. & B., granted an underlease to L. & S. authorising them to remove some of the pillars, which they proceeded to do, alleging that J. & the persons claiming under S., P. & B. were the persons entitled to consent:—Held: during the continuance of the lease of May, 1850, the pillars could not be worked without the consent of the assigns of M., who became such after the execution of that deed, & such working must be restrained at the suit of the son's trustees.—MOSTYN v. LANCASTER, TAYLOR v. MOSTYN (1883), 23 Ch. D. 583; 52 L. J. Ch. 848; 48 L. T. 715; 31 W. R. 686, C. A.

381. —— After alienation of life estate.]—When a person has under several instruments a power of appointment over the same subject-matter, & makes an appointment in exercise of "every power" enabling him in that behalf, the power first in point of time is exercised; & if effectually exercised there remains no subject-matter on which the other powers can operate. The ct. may also consider which power is most beneficial to the donee of the power.

By a settlement made in 1876 estates were limited, in the events which happened, to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, with remainders over. The settlement contained a power for every person "as & when he should be entitled to the possession or the receipt of the rents & profits" of the settled estates, to grant mining leases reserving the best rents or royalties "by the acre, ton, or otherwise" without taking any fine or premium. During A.'s life B. absolutly alienod his reversionary life interest for value. A. died in 1882. Between the coming into operation of Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), & of Settled Land Act, 1890 (c. 69), & after the later Act, B. granted mining leases reserving rents varying with the selling price of the minerals gotten, which was in accordance with the custom of the county. All the leases were granted in exercise of "every power" enabling B. in that behalf. Questions having arisen as to the validity of the leases, & whether they were granted under the power in the settlement or under the power in Settled Land Acts:—Held: (1) it was competent for B. to exercise the power of leasing in the settlement notwithstanding that he has alienod his life estate; (2) the reservation of rents varying with the selling price of the minerals was within the power & valid; (3) the leases were granted under the power in the settlement, which was first in point of date, & not under the power in Settled Land Acts; (4) assuming the leases were granted under Settled Land Acts, the "conflict" referred to in Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), s. 56, meant a conflict between provisions connected with the execution of the power, e.g. the consent of a third party, & not with the result of subject-matter of the power.—LONSDALE (EARL) v. LOWTHER, [1900] 2 Ch. 687; 83 L. By his marriage settlement S. conveyed land of which he was owner in fee to uses under which he was now tenant for life. The deed contained an exception from the conveyance of all mines under the land in question with power to work the same; any person exercising those reserved rights was to make reasonable compensation to the trustees of the settlement for all damages caused to the inheritance, & also to the persons for the time being entitled to the surface of the land for damage to things upon the surface:—Held: S. had no power under the exception to authorise lessees to work the mines so as to let down the surface of the settled land; but as a tenant for life he could under Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), s. 6, grant them a lease of a right to do so.—SITWELL v. LONDESBOROUGH (EARL), [1905] 1 Ch. 460; 53 W. T., & after the death of deft. upon the trusts in the will mentioned. Testator gave the trustees powers of managing real estate & of determining what part of the produce of mines & quarries should be applied as capital or income.

By lease dated Feb. 7, 1898, which lease was determined on June 12, 1912, deft. as tenant for life under Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), demised to lessees a quarry, part of the real estate. The lessees covenanted that when part of the quarry was exhausted they would fill it up fit for agricultural purposes "under a penalty to be recovered as rent in arrear or as liquidated damages by the lessor of £150 an acre." The lessees left 2 acres, 3 roods, 5 poles uncovered in breach of their covenant, & arranged to pay at the rate of £150 per acre in respect of this land a sum amounting to £416 6*s.* 10*d.*, which sum had been paid to deft. 397. General rule—Best rent must be reserved.]—(1) A tenant for life in granting a mining lease under the powers of Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), may (a) reserve no minimum rent for the first year & then a minimum rent on an ascending scale from the second to the fifth years ; (b) may reserve a nominal rent only during the residue of the term after all the saleable coal has been worked out under the provisions of the lease ; (c) may include in the lease a wayleave for foreign coal without reserving any separate rent, though the wayleave is to continue during the residue of the term after all the saleable coal has been worked out & after the cesser of the minimum rent.

(2) A "fixed or minimum rent" under Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), s. 9 (1) (ii), need not be an uniform rent.

The requirements of the Settled Land Acts are that the best rent should be reserved which can be reasonably obtained, regard being had to all the circumstances of the case, & that due regard should be had to the interests of all parties entitled under the settlement. Whether any particular lease satisfies these requirements must depend on the evidence, which should not be couched in general language, but should set out the material circumstances & state the grounds for the conclusion arrived at.

The object of a fixed or minimum rent is twofold ; to provide a specified income on which the tenant for life may rely ; & as a security that the mine will be worked & worked with reasonable rapidity (STIRLING, L.J.).—Re ALDAM'S SETTLED ESTATE, [1902] 2 Ch. 46 ; 71 L. 412. —— ——.]—Testator by his will in 1890 devised the residue of his real & personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale & conversion with a direction to invest the proceeds & to pay the annual income to his widow & after her death as to both capital & income in trust for all his children in equal shares & he declared that the trustees of his will should have power to postpone the sale & conversion but the unsold real estate & the outstanding personal estate should be subject to the trusts thereinbefore contained of the rents & yearly produce thereof & be deemed annual income for the purposes of the trusts & the unsold real estate should be deemed to be converted as from the time of his death & be transmissible as personal estate accordingly. Testator died in 1892 leaving his widow the sole extrix. & trustee of his will & six children surviving him. Shortly after his death his widow as such extrix. & trustee agreed to grant a lease of unopened mines under certain parts of testator's estate to E. & C., two of her sons, & in 1905 a lease was executed by E. & C. who worked the mines & minerals & paid the rents & royalties to the widow, but the lease was never executed by her. The sanction of the ct. to the lease was not obtained under Settled Land Act, 1884 (c. 18), s. 7. C. died leaving deft. H. his legal personal representative & the widow died in 1923. Deft. H., as the legal personal representative of C., who took no benefit under the will of the widow, now claimed on this summons that the estate of the widow was accountable to the estate of her late husband, testator, for three-fourths of the rents & royalties she had received under the lease during her lifetime :—Held : the widow was estopped from denying the validity of the lease, having taken the benefit of the lease, therefore Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), s. 11, became operative & she, the equitable tenant for life, not being unimpeachable for waste under the terms of the will was only entitled to receive one-quarter of the rents & royalties under the lease & ought to have added the remaining three-quarters to capital. Consequently her estate was liable to account to her husband's estate for the three-quarters received by her during her lifetime, the Statutes of Limitations not running in her favour, she being the sole trustee of the will & having herself received the rents & royalties.—Re HODGKINSON, HODGKINSON v. HODGKINSON (1924), 132 L. 414. ————.]—A tenant for life under Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), of mineral land, though not declared unimpeachable for waste by the settlement, is not as regards open mines "impeachable for waste in respect of minerals" within sect. 11, & may therefore grant a lease of such mines upon the terms of setting aside one-fourth only of the rent as capital money arising under the Act.

The evidence shows that both the seams have been worked for coal, & had been worked by testator, but that was some time ago. It is said that in consequence of the lapse of time they are no longer open, but must be treated as abandoned mines. I do not agree with that view. It seems to me there is no evidence of abandonment, & those seams ought to be treated as open mines. As regards the Victoria seam, which is 14 fathoms below the Brockwell seam, which is next above it, it is admitted that it has never been worked, & it does not seem to me that within the authorities it can be treated as an open mine (STIRLING, J.).—Re CHAYTOR, [1900] 2 Ch. 804 ; 69 L. 415. Capitalised rent passes with surface.]—Testatrix, having an absolute power of appointment, gave the surface of land to her nephew, & the minerals under it to others. Under Settled Estates Act, 1856 (c. 120), a lease of the minerals had previously been made, & a part of the rents received had been set aside, & was in the hands of trustees to be invested under the Act in the purchase of other land :—Held : the rents so set aside were lands in the hands of the trustees & passed with the surface.—Re SCARTH (1879), 10 Ch. 416. Leases subject to subsequent settlement.]—Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), s. 11, governs the distribution, as between the limited owner & the remaindermen under a settlement of the rents & royalties derived from mining leases granted under the powers of the Act by the persons having the limited interest under such settlement, but it does not affect the rights of the limited owner & remaindermen under a subsequent settlement to which mines already demised have become subject, & in such a case those rights are governed either by the provisions of the settlement or by the law relating to open mines.

Pltf. was entitled under his marriage settlement, made in 1886, during his life, to the rents, until sale, of one undivided third part, thereby settled, of certain mines devised & settled by the will of his father. In 1895 & 1902 he joined with the tenant for life of one other third part & the owner in fee of the remaining third part in the granting leases of the mines. Subsequently one-half of one of the other third shares devolved upon pltf. subject to the leases, & being caught by the terms of the conveyance in his marriage settlement became subject to it :—Held : pltf. was entitled, during his life or until sale, to receive the whole of the rents & profits derived from the one-sixth share in question during the continuance of the leases.—Re HALL, HALL v. HALL, [1916] 2 Ch. 488 ; 86 L. 417. Leases invalid under Settled Land Act.]—A tenant for life, impeachable for waste, under a settlement which included real estate & unopened mines severed from the surface, which was not included in the settlement, granted a take-note or licence for three years to search for & work gold & other ores in the mines subject to the rights of the Crown, if any. The tenant for life subsequently acquired a lease from the Crown for twenty-one years of the gold & silver ores in the mines together with a release of the Crown's statutory right of pre-emption over the base ores. He then granted further take-notes & leases of the mines for short terms, all of which expired during his life, & received rents & premiums. None of the take-notes or leases were valid under Settled Land Acts, under which alone he had power to deal with the mines. On the expiration of the Crown lease he obtained a renewal for a further period of twenty-one years, & granted valid separate sub-leases of the gold & silver ores & of the base materials for the residue of the Crown term less one day. On the death of the tenant for life in 1916 the tenant in tail in remainder, who had barred the entail, brought an action against the exors. of the tenant for life claiming the amount of the premiums & three-fourths of the rents received by him, & a declaration that pltf. was entitled to the subsisting Crown lease subject to & with benefit of the sub-leases. SARGANT, J., held that the take-notes & leases for short terms being invalid under the Settled Land Acts the rents & premiums received thereunder could not be recovered by pltf., & the subsisting Crown lease & sub-leases did not belong to the estate. The Ct. of Appeal affirmed the first part of the decision of SARGANT, J., but reversed the second, on the ground that the tenant for life had used his position to obtain the Crown lease, & that so far as the release of the right of pre-emption over the base ores was concerned that lease extended to something which was included in the settlement. He must therefore be taken to have acquired the lease as trustee for the beneficiaries, & pltf. was entitled to the unexpired portion of the lease subject to & with benefit of the sub-leases.—LLOYD-JONES v. CLARK-LLOYD, [1919] 1 Ch. 424 ; 88 L. All the authorities establish this: that the produce of the mines is made part of the annual profits of the estate, & that whether in royalties, or in whatever other way it is produced, it forms part of those profits, & that it is not to be treated like timber cut, where the produce of it is invested, & the interest only is paid to the tenant for life. 431. Exercise of leasing powers—During life of tenant for life impeachable for waste.]—Testator, after giving certain legacies & annuities, which, with his debts, etc., were charged upon his real estate, in case the personal estate should be insufficient, devised the residue of his real estate to A. & B. in trust for the heirs of his body issuing & in default of such issue, to the use of the trustees, in trust to pay the rents, issues, & profits to C. for life, but impeachable of waste for cutting down any timber during the life of C. or for pulling down any house or building without erecting a new one of equal value in its stead, or "for digging or getting any part of any coal or cannel opened, or to be opened, otherwise than under & by virtue of & agreeable to the power thereinafter given for that purpose"; remainder to D. for life, impeachable of waste for the same matters as those in respect of which C. was impeachable, except for cutting timber; remainder to the trustees, to support contingent remainders; remainder to E. in tail male; with several other remainders over, & the ultimate remainder (reversion) to the right heirs of testator. Then followed a power to "the person or persons (except C.) who by virtue of the limitations thereinbefore expressed should, for the time being, be seised of, or entitled to, the actual freehold of the hereditaments thereby devised in strict settlement, or to the annual rents, issues, & profits thereof," to grant leases, in possession, of the mines, at : mine-rent; & a similar power to grant leases of the lands: —Held: the trustees, who had the legal estate during the life of C., had during her life power to grant leases of the coal or cannel mines.—LEIGH v. BALCARRES (EARL) (1848), 6 C. By an order made under Settled Estates Act, 1856 (c. 120), power was given to the trustees to grant mining leases in conformity with & subject to the provisions of Settled Estates Act, 1856 (c. 120); such leases to be granted with the consent of the respective tenants for life if of age. The trustees & the two tenants for life entered into an agreement with defts. to grant them a mining lease of the two estates for forty years, or fifty years if the ct. should consent; both estates were intended to be comprised in the same lease, & the rents & royalties were to be reserved as if they were one estate, & there was to be one shaft for working the minerals under both estates; & it was also agreed that the lessors should be at liberty to apply to the ct. under the Settled Estates Act for further powers of leasing:—Held: the trustees had no power to grant such a lease of the two estates, & specific performance of the agreement was refused.—TOLSON v. SHEARD (1877), 5 Ch. The comrs. allotted certain plots of land to S. & E., which afterwards vested in deft., who in 1845 worked the coal under one of the plots of land, in 1847 under a second, in 1848 under a third, in 1849 under a fourth, & in 1855 under a fifth. Pltfs., who claimed the coal under the lord of the manor at the time of the inclosure Act, commenced, in 1867, an action of trespass for working the coal:—Held: the action was maintainable, for the acts of trespass committed more than twenty years before suit could not be relied upon as constituting a possession adverse to pltfs., there being no sufficient evidence that the then owner of the mines was aware that the acts of trespass were being committed.

The declaration in ejectment did not mention mines at all, but the sheriff, in executing the writ of possession, by the concurrence of the tenant, delivered possession of the premises demised to the tenant, & also of those mines in which he had liberty to dig:—Held: although the latter could not be recovered under the declaration in ejectment, still that the tenant by his own act had estopped himself from taking that objection, & in an action for the value of three years' improved rent, under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, the landlord might recover the treble rent, in respect not only of the demised premises, but of the mines in which the tenant had only a liberty to dig. The improved or rack rent mentioned in 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 12, is not the rent reserved, but such a rent as the landlord & tenant might fairly agree on at the time of delivering the declaration in ejectment, in case the premises were then to be let.

Here the ejectment is to recover, among other things, a certain number of acres of common land. Under certain common lands there are mines. The ejectment might be to recover these lands or not, according as the tenant was or was not in possession of the surface land; for if he was in possession of such land, there can be no doubt that the mines under it might be recovered (BAYLEY, J.).—CROCKER v. FOTHERGILL (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 652; 106 E. There was in that deed a covenant to levy a fine; & in about a month afterwards a fine was levied, & the enumeration of the premises was in the very terms used in the deed to describe the premises of which partition was to be made, not mentioning mines & minerals:—Held: the deed & fine making together one conveyance, the operation of the fine was limited to the words of the deed, & consequently it had no operation upon the mines or minerals.

(2) An objection was made that ejectment could not be maintained for unopened mines, which might have no existence:—Held: that objection, if of any weight, was obviated by the consent rule.—DOE d. LORD v. KINGSBURY (1848), 10 L. T. O. S. 442.

raise, make merchantable, & dispose of the same to their own use; & to make adits, etc., necessary for the exercise of that liberty, together with the use of all waters & watercourses, excepting to the grantor liberty for driving any new adit within the lands thereby granted, & to convey any watercourse over the premises granted, habendum for twenty-one years; covenant by the grantee to pay one-eighth share of all ore to the grantor, & all rates, taxes, etc., & to work effectually the mines during the term; & then, in failure of the performance of any of the covenants, a right of re-entry was reserved to the grantor:—Held: this deed did not amount to a lease, but contained a mere licence to dig & search for minerals, & the grantee could not maintain an ejectment for mines lying within the limits of the set, but not connected with the workings of the grantee.

The words import a grant of such parts . . . only as should, upon the licence & power given to search & get, be found within the described limits, which is nothing more than the grant of a licence to search & get, irrevocable, indeed, on account of its carrying an interest, with a grant of such of the ore only as should be found & got, the grantor parting with no estate or interest in the rest. If so the grantee had no estate or property in the land itself, or any particular portion thereof, or in any part of the ore, metals or minerals, ungot therein; but he had a right of property only, as to such part thereof as upon the liberties granted to him should be dug & got. That is no more than a mere right to a personal chattel, when obtained in pursuance of incorporeal privileges granted for the purpose of obtaining it . . . & is not sufficient to support the present action of ejectment (ABBOTT, C.J.).

(2) The grantee commenced working the mines, but after some time discontinued, not being prevented by the want of water, or any other inevitable accident. The grantor, after some lapse of time, verbally authorised other persons to dig for ore throughout part of the land described in the deed, & met those persons on part of the land, & pointed out the boundaries within which they were to exercise the liberty; & himself subsequently entered into a mining adventure with other persons, which was carried on within the limits described in the indenture; & afterwards, in consideration of the surrender of the first grant, & of certain payments, demised the premises to a lessee for twenty-one years; & upon the execution of this lease, the original deed was delivered up, but there was no surrender in writing:—Held: these acts amounted to a re-entry by the grantor, inasmuch, as unless referred to the exercise of that right, they would be acts of trespass by him.—DOE d. 452. ———.]—By the decree made in this suit in 1870, it was declared that defts. H. & F., & the estate of deceased deft. W., were answerable for all minerals gotten or removed from under pltfs.' farm; & an inquiry was directed what quantities of minerals had been so gotten or removed, & it was ordered that the value at the pit's mouth of all mineral so gotten or removed, with just allowances for carriage, but none for getting, should be certified. The decree was silent as to interest, no claim for interest being made at the hearing.

After the decree defts. H. & F. died, & the suit was continued, so far as the inquiry was concerned, against their representatives.

The Official Referee having, in Dec. 1889, reported the value at the pit's mouth of the minerals taken to be £9,028 6*s*., pltfs., upon the further consideration of the suit in 1891, claimed to be entitled to damages in the nature of interest on that amount on the ground that the action was in the nature of an action of trover or trespass de bonis asportatis within Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (c. 42), s. 29:—Held: the action must be treated as an equitable action to recover the benefits that defts. or their respective estates had received from the wrongful taking of the minerals belonging to pltfs., & not as an action of trover or trespass; &, although according to the settled practice in the case of such an equitable action, pltfs. might, at the hearing, have been allowed interest on the value of the minerals wrongfully taken, yet, pltfs. not having claimed interest at the hearing & the decree being silent as to interest, it was too late to claim it for the first time twenty years after the date of the decree.

This action is not an action for money had & received. Defts. are not required to account for what they have received, but for the value of the coal raised, that is to say the market price or value after making just allowances (LINDLEY, L.J.).

475. —— —— Minerals not intended to be included in grant.]—Pltfs. were seised in fee of lands to which their predecessors derived title under a conveyance in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, wherein the grantor reserved to himself & his heirs male a rentcharge of 7*s.* 8*d.*, & which contained a proviso that the grantee & his heirs should not dig or get any coal upon the lands for sale, but only such as should be burned or employed thereon. Deft. claiming title under a demise from a descendant of the same grantor, had for more than twenty years worked from mines of his own under adjacent lands, into, & had taken coals from, the mines under pltfs.' lands:—Held: (1) the proviso in the original conveyance was a covenant, & not a repugnant condition, & it did not affect the amount of damages which pltfs. were entitled to claim, as, under it, the grantee was still entitled to get all the coal for his own use, though not to sell it; (2) deft. had not acquired any title to the mine by possession under the Stat. Limitations, & pltfs. were entitled to an injunction with an account for six years; (3) as the deft. had been working under a bonâ fide belief as to his title, he was entitled, in taking the account, to an allowance of his expenses of severing the coal as well as bringing it to bank.

I can well understand that there might be cases in which, from the manner of working coal, a person who began to work it, & was a mere wrong-doer & trespasser, might have acquired a title to a certain seam or area of coal, & that, by the mode of driving the levels & opening a certain area of coal, there might have been possession acquired to the whole thing as a mine or as a seam of coal, & not merely to the particular quantity of coal that was actually hewn & gotten (HALL, V.-C.).

The property being coal, if a trespasser takes away that coal, I cannot measure the damage in any other way than by the value of that coal. I cannot discount it in any way by the consideration of whether it would ever have been gotten or not for the purpose of being employed upon the tenement & premises (HALL, V.-C.).

As to the time during which the account is to go, that is clearly covered by the statute (HALL, V.-C.).—ASHTON v. STOCK (1877), 6 Ch. D. 719; 25 W. R. 862.

An injunction was granted to restrain deft. from further proceedings; to stop up the existing openings & cuttings; from making another further opening which would have the effect complained of; for compensation for what damage had been sustained by pltfs.; & for an account of the value of the coal abstracted.

497. —— ——.]—(1) In an ordinary copyhold manor the estate of the copyhold is in the soil throughout except as regards trees, mines, & minerals, the property in which remains in the lord. When the lord has removed minerals the space left belongs to the copyholder. The right of the lord is not like that of a vendor of freeholds who has reserved mines, & remains the owner of the vacant space from which minerals have been removed. In a Crown manor, where the Crown & its lessees were by custom entitled to enter on the land for the purpose of working the minerals, deft., the lessee of the Crown mines, who was also lessee of the S. mine outside the manor, claimed a right to use a crut or underground way beneath the land of the pltfs., who were copyholders of part of the manor, for the purpose of conveying minerals from the S. mine to the deep pit by which the manorial mines were worked, & thence by a branch railway constructed by deft. over part of the same copyhold to the main line:—Held: such user was a trespass, &, no case of acquiescence on the part of pltfs. or their predecessor in title having been established, they were entitled to an injunction to restrain deft. from carrying the S. minerals over or under their copyhold land.

(2) If a stranger takes the minerals, the copyholder can bring trespass against the stranger for interfering with his possession, & the lord may bring trover, or whatever the form of action may be now, against the stranger to recover the minerals (JESSEL, M.R.).

509. —— Ascertainment of extent of trespass.]—The owner of a mine sought relief against the owner of an adjoining mine for an alleged trespass in working into pltf.'s mine:—Held: pltf., upon making out a primâ facie case, was entitled to an interlocutory order for the inspection of deft.'s mine; the denial by deft. of the trespass was not a sufficient ground for refusing the order, & it did not depend upon the balance of testimony.

Suppose a man had a right to the surface, & that another person was entitled to the minerals. If the latter insisted that the former had sunk a shaft & was abstracting his minerals, would not this ct. allow an inspection, in order that the fact in dispute might be ascertained? . . . Pltf. is entitled to an inspection but it must be at his own expense, & on giving deft. reasonable notice. Pltf. must have an order to inspect at all reasonable times upon giving one day's notice, so far as may be necessary to ascertain whether deft. has worked into pltf.'s land, & how far & to what extent, with liberty to measure, dial & make all such plans or surveys as may be necessary for that purpose, & to use deft.'s machinery for descending & ascending, doing no injury to pltf.'s works, & paying deft. any expenses which he may incur (ROMILLY, M.R.).—BENNITT v. WHITEHOUSE (1860), 28 Beav. 119; 29 L. Pltf. having reason to believe that defts. had encroached upon his mine, obtained permission from them to make an inspection of their mine, when he found a recently erected wall at the boundary between the two mines, which prevented him from ascertaining whether defts. had encroached upon his mine or not. Application by him to defts. for permission to take down a portion of this wall in order to complete the inspection having been refused, pltf. applied to a judge at chambers, under C. L. P. Act, 1854 (c. 125), s. 58, for an order for inspection. The judge, upon being satisfied that a portion of defts.' wall could be safely removed, & an inspection behind it made without danger to life, & with no further detriment to defts. than a temporary suspension of their works, made an order that pltf. should inspect defts.' mine at & behind the wall, & should be at liberty, so far as was necessary for the purpose of the inspection, to make a driftway through the wall; before making the inspection giving security to the satisfaction of the master to the extent of £500, or depositing that sum with the master, to abide any order the ct. might make as to indemnifying defts. from any loss or damage they might sustain in consequence of the inspection:—Held: refusing a motion on behalf of defts. for a rule calling on pltf. to show cause why this order should not be set aside, the order was good, & not in excess of the judge's jurisdiction under the statute.—BENNETT v. GRIFFITHS (1861), 3 E. & E. 467; 30 L. common of a coal mine, had notice of negotiation, which was followed by a lease for three years, in which he did not join, by his two-co-tenants, dated in Dec. 1865, of two undivided thirds of the coal with licence to work the coal. Under this licence some coal, but considerably less than two-thirds of the whole, was raised, & one-third of the royalty was kept by the licencee for pltf. A negotiation for a further licence was on foot, when in Oct. 1872, pltf. filed the bill against his co-tenants & the licencee, praying for an inquiry as to the value of the coals raised: & an account against all defts. as trespassers; for an injunction & receiver; & for damages:—Held: the working was not a trespass; & pltf. electing to dismiss the bill with costs against his co-tenants, decree, without costs, against the licencee for an account of the value at the pit's mouth of the coal raised, less costs of getting & raising, & for payment of one-third to pltf.

No authority has been referred to, & I believe none can be found, to say that the rights of tenants in common in a mine are not as extensive as can be suggested for each of these tenants to do what he wills with the undivided property, provided always that he does not take more than his share. . . . If a wrongdoer does an act which, if it were the case of a chattel, & capable of sustaining an indictment, would amount to larceny—then the most rigorous mode of taking the accounts is that which is adopted against him. If it has been by inadvertence, or by negligence, not culpable as tortious, in any other sense—then pltf. is entitled to the value of the coal at the pit's mouth, allowing nothing for the mere severance, but allowing for the transport of the coal to the pit's mouth (BACON, V.-C.).—JOB v. POTTON (1875), L. 558. —— Less costs of bringing to bank only.]—Pltfs., who were owners of a coal mine, claimed damages against the owners of an adjoining mine for having broken their barriers & worked their coal. The wrongful acts were committed in 1863 while the adjoining mine was being worked by the Hartlepool Ry. Co. The boundaries of the two mines were settled by mutual agreement in 1862, & after some lengthy negotiations a release was executed in 1864 by which all previous wrongful acts were condoned & released on both sides. An Act of Parliament was passed in 1863 by which the Hartlepool Ry. Co. were to sell their mines within five years; & in 1865 the railway co. was amalgamated with deft. co., & all their assets & liabilities were transferred to them:—Held: (1) although it was ultra vires of the railway co. to work mines, the Act of 1863 implied that the co. were to have power to work their mines until the mines were sold, & upon the amalgamation with deft. co. the latter became liable for the wrongful acts of their predecessors.

That it is ultra vires of a railway co. as harbour co. to work collieries does not & cannot, in my opinion, admit of the slightest doubt (MALINS, V.-C.).

(2) The wrongful acts committed in 1863 were not condoned by the release of 1864, pltfs. having had no ground for suspecting that while the release was in negotiation the previous settlement of boundaries had been broken.

(3) There must be an account of all coals & other materials worked by the W. H. Company from the W. C. Colliery & the mines therein comprised, & the value of such coal at the pit's mouth, making to defts. all just allowances for the costs & expenses incurred by them in bringing such coal to the pit's mouth, but not including the cost of getting or severing the coal (MALINS, V.-C.).—ECCLESIASTICAL COMRS. (2) In trespass for taking coals from pltf.'s mine, where deft. is a mere wrongdoer, the measure of damages is the value of the coals at the time when they first existed as chattels, & deft. is not entitled to any deduction for the expense of getting them, or for a rent payable to the mine owner on coals got from the mine.

As to the damages, the jury are at liberty to give the full value of the coals, calculated at the time when they first exist as chattels, without deducting the expense of getting them, according to the rule laid down in the case of Martin v. Porter, No. 567, ante, which is a very salutary one, because the parties must know—at least they may know by proper drilling—that they are trespassing on their neighbours' property (PARKE, B.).—WILD v. HOLT (1842), 9 M. & W. 672 ; 1 Dowl. 576. Application of Statute of Frauds—"Interest in land"—Agreement to share profit & loss of colliery—Not affecting ownership of land.]—The Lord Chancellor upon appeal affirmed the decree upon the points decided at the Rolls; & held further, that the case was not within Stat. The case is merely a case of agreement to share profit & loss in the trade of a colliery; which does not at all affect the ownership of the land (LORD LOUGHBOROUGH, C.).—FORSTER v. HALE (1800), 5 Ves. 308; 31 E. R. 603, L. C.; affg. (1798), 3 Ves. 696.

m. ——.]—T. gave pltf. a memorandum whereby for $50, T. agreed were the lessees, under an agreement for a lease from the freeholder, & of which P. (resp.) was the manager, at a salary of £1 a week. The concern being in want of money, J., T. & P. borrowed of a bank, on their joint note, £150 to pay the colliers' wages, on which note P. was afterwards sued, & judgment obtained against him, & he was also summoned by the colliers for wages, which he was adjudged by the magistrates to pay. At a meeting subsequently held to consider the best means of forming a limited liability co. of which C., applt., & P., resp. & also J. & T. were present, applt. refused to join the co. unless resp. retired from all connection with it, when it was agreed, by all present, that £60 should be paid to resp. "for any interest he might have, & for his services rendered in working the colliery." Resp. sued applt., together with J. & T. in the county ct. (abandoning the excess above £50) for breach of their promise to pay him the £60 :—Held : (1) the interest of resp. in the colliery was not an interest in or concerning land, within Stat. Frauds, s. 4, & therefore the agreement for breach of which the claim was brought need not be in writing ; (2) as manager, resp. might be liable to be sued by creditors & workmen, & in various ways, & so had an interest the giving up of which formed a good consideration for defts.' promise.

Two objections have been taken on the part of applt. First, that the agreement above-mentioned was a contract concerning land, or an interest in land, & so should have been in writing, under Stat. Frauds. No doubt, if it had appeared that pltf.'s interest had been an interest in land, the objection would have been formidable & ought to prevail. But it appears from the case that pltf. was the manager of the colliery (KELLY, C.B.).—CHEADLE v. PROCTOR (1868), 19 L. T. 289.

582. —— Failure to object within stipulated time.]—Advertisement of an estate for sale by auction described as containing "coal which was then in the course of working in the adjoining estate" : the vendor having no right to the coal & minerals under the surface : the conditions of sale (which did not allude to the vendor having such a right, & which at the sale was stated by the auctioneer to be in another party) stipulated that the vendor's title should be deemed accepted unless the purchaser declared within one month after the delivery of the abstract of title his dissatisfaction, & that if any error, misstatement, or omission should be discovered in the description of the property, same should not vitiate the sale but should be the subject for compensation. On the face of the abstract, which was duly delivered, the right to dig coals, etc., appeared not to be in the vendors. A purchaser made no objection to the vendors' title within the stipulated time. On a claim filed by the vendors for specific performance, & a cross claim by the purchaser for compensation, the Vice-Chancellor dismissed them both without costs. 584. Right of purchaser to rescind — Though time for completion of contract not expired.]—On Apr. 17, 1889, deft.'s agent wrote to pltf.'s agent offering £800 for a house of pltf. On Apr. 25 pltf.'s agent, by his authority, wrote, accepting the offer, & stating that possession would be given at mid-summer. Pltf.'s solrs. sent to deft.'s solr. a draft contract containing special conditions, which deft.'s solr. struck out. On May 14 pltf.'s solrs. wrote to deft.'s solr : "We cannot consent to all your alterations, which, in fact, make the contract almost an open one." On May 17 deft.'s solr. sent back the draft with a letter stating that he could not advise his client to go on with the negotiations. Pltf.'s solrs. sent back the draft with some variations & with the abstract of title, from which it appeared that the land was enfranchised copyhold, & that the vendor had not the mines. On May 20 deft.'s solr. wrote to pltf.'s solrs. that, as pltf. had not the mines, he could not advise his client to go on with the matter. Deft. according refused to proceed. Pltf. negotiated with the lord of the manor for the purchase of the mines, but did not obtain a conveyance of them till Sept. In the meantime, on June 22, 1889, pltf. commenced this action for specific performance or damages. The judge held that the letters of Apr. constituted a contract, & that it was not affected by the subsequent correspondence; but that, as pltf. had occasioned the difficulty by insisting on stipulations to which he was not entitled, the action must be dismissed. Pltf. appealed:—Held: (1) as in May, 1889, the vendor had not power to convey the mines, nor power to compel a conveyance of them from any other person, the purchaser was entitled, upon discovering this, to rescind the contract, though the time to be allowed for completion had not expired, & specific performance could not be decreed; (2) pltf. could not sustain a claim for damages for breach of contract, since he was not, on June 24, which must be treated as the end of the time allowed for completion, in a position to give deft. such a conveyance as deft. was entitled to. Qu.: whether, if on June 24 pltf. had been able & willing to give deft. a proper conveyance, he would not have been entitled to damages for deft.'s breach of contract.

(3) It is said that the [deft.] knew this was enfranchised land. 586. ——.]—The vendor of an estate had granted to A. the right to work coals under the property, with a proviso, that when the working of the coal had finally ceased, the pits should be filled up, & the land restored to a proper state of cultivation. A. ceased to work the mines, & filled in the pits. Upon the sale of the estate A. claimed to be entitled to re-work the coal, & the purchaser therefore claimed compensation. The ct. considered that there had only been a temporary cessation to work the coals:—Held: the purchaser was entitled to compensation to be ascertained by an expert appointed by the judge.—RAMSDEN v. HURST (1858), 27 L. 587. ——.]—A condition giving the vendor the right to rescind in the event of his unwillingness to comply with an objection to the title, must not be considered as giving him an arbitrary power to annul the contract; some reasonable ground for his unwillingness must be shown. Before a vendor will be allowed to rescind, he must satisfy the ct. that he entered into the contract in ignorance of some material fact or document, or under some mistaken notion that he was entitled to sell & could make a title; there must be no failure of duty on his part, no element of shortcoming, & he must have omitted nothing which the ordinarily prudent man, having regard to his contractual relations with other persons, is bound to do.

J. & others contracted to sell to H. a villa residence by a description wide enough to include the mines & minerals under it. The contract provided (clause 13) that if the purchaser should "insist on any objection or requisition as to title" which the vendors should "be unable . . . or decline" to comply with, the vendors might rescind the contract; & (clause 14) that any error or misstatement should form the subject of compensation. The vendors believed that it was well known in the district that the minerals were reserved. The purchaser having insisted on a requisition that the vendors' title to the minerals should be furnished, the vendors gave a notice purporting to rescind the contract under clause 13:—Held: though the purchaser's objection was "an objection to the title" within the terms of clause 13, it was not an objection that the vendors could avail themselves of as a ground for rescinding the contract, having regard to the facts & their own conduct; & the purchaser was entitled, under clause 14, to a conveyance of the property with compensation in respect of the mines & minerals.—Re JACKSON & HADEN'S CONTRACT, [1906] 1 Ch. 412; 75 L. 588. Right of vendor to rescind—Title to minerals doubtful.]—In a contract for sale of lands containing valuable quarries, there was a clause reserving to the vendors power to rescind if any objection should be persisted in, & another providing that compensation should be given for any error in the description of the property or the vendors' interest therein. The purchaser alleging that the right to the quarries was in a third party, under an exception of "mines & minerals" in one of the title deeds, asked for compensation, which the vendors, insisting that they could make a title to the quarries under a custom or by adverse user, refused to make, & upon petitioner persisting in his demand they exercised their power of rescinding. Upon bill filed by the purchaser:—Held: the question between the parties was one of title, & the rescission was therefore justifiable.—MAWSON v. FLETCHER (1870), 6 Ch. App. 91; 40 L. J. vendor covenanted to "convey the said land & premises to the purchaser by good & sufficient deed & transfer," & the purchaser accepted the title of the vendor, assumed an existing mtge., & went into & remained in possession for nearly six years, during which time he obtained an extension of the time for payment of the mtge. 601. Purchaser hurrying vendor into agreement.]—There being no fiduciary relation between vendor & a purchaser, the purchaser is not bound to disclose any fact exclusively within his knowledge which might be expected to influence the price of the subject to be sold. Simple reticence does not amount to legal fraud, but a word or gesture intended to induce the vendor to believe in the existence of a non-existing fact, which might influence the price of the subject to be sold, would be sufficient ground for a ct. of equity to refuse a decree of specific performance, & so, a fortiori, would any contrivance on the part of the purchaser, better informed than the vendor as to value, to hurry the vendor into an agreement without giving him an opportunity of being fully informed on that subject, or taking advice as to the terms of the bargain.

Where therefore an intended lessor & lessee of minerals were in the above position as to knowledge, & the intended lessee brought to the lessor a lease ready prepared, without previous negotiation as to the details of it, & induced the latter to sign it, saying he might trust to the proposed lessee for making a fair allowance if the minerals turned out more valuable than was supposed:—Held: a bill for specific performance filed by the intended lessee, offering to make a fair extra allowance, could not be sustained, & its dismissal was confirmed on appeal.

604. Where fiduciary relation exists.]—The obligations on a solr. dealing with his client extend to the case of a dealing between a solr. & the trustee in bkpcy. of his client.

C. was, under the will of his mother, entitled to an interest in real estate, but whether for life or absolute was doubtful. He became bkpt., & a trustee in bkpcy. was appointed. J., the solr. of bkpt., had as solr., & having acted for some years as receiver, acquired an intimate knowledge of the nature & value of the estate. He had in negotiating mtges. for C. to consider the extent of his interest under the will; had obtained the opinion of counsel that it was for life only; but had himself formed an opinion that it was, probably, absolute, & not as he had described in his correspondence with the parties concerned merely for life; & he also formed an opinion that the estate was more valuable than the rental showed. He did not disclose his opinion to C., or to the trustee in bkpcy., or to his solr. He was employed by bkpt. to negotiate with the trustee for the purchase of his interest for the benefit of his wife & children. In the negotiation, as solr. & agent for bkpt., he found that the trustee could be induced to sell the interest for a very small sum (£77), & he availed himself of his knowledge, & contracted to purchase, secretly, for himself, but in the name of his brother, an interest which, as the ct. afterwards, in an action for administration, held, was absolute, & was worth some thousands of pounds. He never suggested to the trustee that he intended to purchase for himself, but gave him & his solr. to believe that the purchase was on behalf of bkpt.'s family. In an action by a subsequent trustee in bkpcy. to set aside the sale:—Held: the trustee in bkpcy. stood in the place of bkpt. for the purpose, that the solr. for bkpt. could not be allowed to hold as against the trustee an advantage obtained by him in the purchase from him by means of the knowledge which he had gained whilst acting as solr. for bkpt., & that J. & his brother were trustees for the trustee in bkpcy. & must give up to him every advantage of the purchase.

Taking the familiar illustration, if the agent becomes from his employment aware of the existence of a coal mine under his employer's land of which the employer is ignorant, though he could not purchase from the employer without disclosing that, it was said that he may do so from his trustee in bkpcy. I entirely dissent from that argument. SUB-SECT. 2.—TERMS WHICH MAY BE IMPLIED OR IMPOSED.

A. Right of Entry.

608. Sale of mines on varying royalty — Entry to discover quantity of minerals obtained.]—In a contract for sale of the minerals under a given quantity of surface at a certain price, payable by instalments, the times of payment to be accelerated if more than a certain quantity of minerals should be gotten from time to time, the vendor impliedly reserves the power of entering & inspecting the mines, to ascertain the quantity of mineral from time to time gotten therefrom; & the vendor is entitled to a specific performance of the contract, with a covenant reserving such power in the conveyance.

Where coal mines are either let or sold at a royalty, with stipulations as to the manner of working the mines, a right of entry to view the mines is reserved to the lessees, for the twofold purpose of seeing, first, in what manner the mines are worked; &, secondly, the quantity of minerals obtained. A covenant or proviso for this purpose is . . . incidental to the contract for such a lease or sale (WIGRAM, V.-C.).—BLAKESLEY v WHIELDON (1841), 1 Hare, 176; 6 Jur. 54; 66 E. R. 990.

C. Possession and Payment.

611. Right to possession—From month or week of purchase—According to usual course of taking account.]—Purchase of a share in a colliery in trust for the agent & manager confirmed under particular circumstances, but with reluctance. The rule, that a purchaser shall have possession as from the quarter day preceding the sale, does not apply to a colliery; which is an article of trade, the profits accruing daily. The proper period is the month or week, in which the purchase takes place; according to the usual course of taking the account.

This application is made upon the common rule that a purchaser shall be let into possession from the quarter day preceding his purchase; paying his money before the following one. The difficulty is, that there is no such thing as a quarter day in this concern. They settle their profits monthly. He is therefore entitled to the profits only from the commencement of the month in which he purchased; paying his purchase-money in the course of that month (LORD ELDON, C.).—WREN v. KIRTON (1803), 8 Ves. 502; 32 E. 612. —— —— ——.]—The sale of a colliery is not like the sale of a landed estate, & a purchaser . . . is not entitled to call for an account of the profits of a colliery from any particular quarter day, as upon the sale of a landed estate he is entitled to do. Collieries & landed estates are quite different in the contemplation of this ct.: a colliery being always considered as a trade, the profits accruing from day to day as in all trading concerns (LORD ELDON, C.).—WILLIAMS v. ATTENBOROUGH (1823), Turn. & R. 70; 1 L. predecessor in title, but stating that there was no express mention in the conveyances of the minerals under the land, & requiring that the purchasers should assume that six undivided shares of the minerals passed by the conveyances of the land, & thereby became absolutely vested in the vendors' predecessor in title. In the abstract of the vendors' title sent to the purchasers mention was made of a certain indenture, but nothing further was said about it. The purchasers' solr. inquired of the vendors' solr. what this deed was, & was told that it could not be found, & no abstract of it or information about it could be furnished, but that it was believed not to affect the property sold. The vendors' solr. also said, as he really believed to be the case, that though the title to the six undivided shares could not be strictly proved, yet the vendors had a good holding title to them. After these transactions the purchasers entered into the agreement, & paid the deposit money. Subsequently, the deed which was supposed to have been lost was found, when it was discovered that by virtue of it the six undivided shares of the mine belonged to some person quite different from the vendors, & that neither they, nor their predecessors in title, had ever had any title to those shares. The purchasers refused to proceed with the agreement, whereupon the vendors brought this action for specific performance of it. The purchasers contended that without these six shares the mine would be useless to them, & claimed to be entitled to be released from the agreement:—Held: as there had been no fraud in the matter, but the vendors had acted under a bonâ fide mistake, & the purchasers had had the fact that there was a doubt as to the title brought to their notice before entering into the agreement, & had thought fit to run the risk of taking the property without having the matter cleared up, specific performance of the agreement ought to be decreed, but that a deduction must be made from the purchase money as compensation to the purchasers for the loss of the six shares.—ENGLISH v. MURRAY (1883), 49 L. SUB-SECT. 4.—SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

See, generally, SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

618. Whether remedy lies — Covenant for unlimited option of purchase of mines.]—In a conveyance of a plot of land, reserving the mines under it to the vendor, there was a covenant by the vendor with the purchaser, that, in case the vendor, his heirs or assigns, should at any time thereafter sell, or agree to sell, to any person the mines under some adjoining lands belonging to him, he, his heirs or assigns, would at the same time offer to the purchaser of the plot of land, his heirs or assigns, the mines under that plot, & give him & them the refusal of same for one month from the time such offer should be made, at the same price per acre as the vendor, his heirs or assigns, should have agreed to sell the adjoining mines. If the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, should accept such offer, & within such month agree to purchase the mines so offered, at the price at which they should be offered, the vendor, his heirs or assigns, should convey same to the purchaser, his heirs or assigns:—Held: (1) this covenant was not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities; (2) the performance of the covenant could be enforced by assigns of the purchaser against devisees of the vendor; (3) it was necessary that the offer should be made in writing, & consequently the non-acceptance within a month of a parol offer made by the devisees of the vendor did not deprive the assigns of the purchaser of their rights under the covenant; & specific performance of the covenant was decreed against the devisees of the vendor & a purchaser from them (with notice of the covenant) of the adjoining land & the mines under it, & also of the mines under the plot of land, to whom they had actually executed a conveyance.—BIRMINGHAM CANAL CO. v. CARTWRIGHT (1879), 11 Ch. 620. Compensation to purchaser—In respect of misrepresentation—Where specific performance decreed—Costs.]—In suits as to the specific performance of a contract to purchase large colliery works, the purchasers alleged as a defence misrepresentation by the vendors as to the value. As to several allegations the purchasers were held to have failed, & specific performance was decreed, but with compensation to the purchasers in respect of an alleged misrepresentation as to the amount of stores consumed in the collieries, & a consequent excess in the statement of income. An inquiry was directed as to such compensation, & it was found that there was a large excess in the statement of income beyond its true amount:—Held: (1) the purchasers were entitled to a deduction from their purchase-money bearing the same proportion to the whole purchase-money as the excess bore to the income stated; (2) as no direction as to costs was given by the original decree in the suits, & as the purchasers were held to be entitled to a considerable abatement, the vendors must pay the costs of the suits, & could not on the hearing on further consideration be relieved from payment of any part of the costs on account of the failure of the purchasers as to parts of their case on the original hearing.—POWELL v. ELLIOT (1875), 10 Ch. 621. Appointment of receiver & manager pending hearing of action for rescission.]—In a suit by the purchaser of a coal mine to rescind the contract on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentations, it being essential that the mine should be kept in a going state, the ct., upon the application of the purchaser, who was in possession of the colliery, appointed a receiver & manager until the hearing.—GIBBS v. DAVID (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 373; 44 L. J. Ch. 770; 33 L. T. 298; 23 W. R. 786.

SECT. 1.—CONTRACTS FOR SALE OF MINERALS.

622. Specific performance—Contract involving superintendence of court.]—In contracts relating to commodities fluctuating from day to day in market price, the ct. expects persons to be unusually vigilant & active in asserting their right to specific performance, which it is inequitable to grant after such an interval, & when the parties may be no longer in the same position. Such a contract is a positive contract, & does not give jurisdiction to restrain sale to other parties.

Bill by a co. for smelting & manufacturing iron, against proprietors of coal mines adjoining their works, for specific performance of an agreement to sell to the co., at a fixed price per ton, all of certain beds of coal, estimated to contain from 120,000 to 150,000 tons, to be raised & delivered by defts. at the rate of 500 tons per week, & the co. to drain the beds; & for an injunction to restrain defts. from selling any part to other persons. The bill averred, that the coal was very conveniently situate with reference to the co.'s iron works, which adjoined thereto; & that the co. had the power, by means of their engines & pits, to drain the beds, & had occasion for a large quantity of coal of that particular description. Demurrer allowed, mainly on ground of laches, the co. having neglected to file their bill until eleven months after they discovered that defts. had ceased to deliver the coal, & were referred by defts. to their solrs.

Leave to amend & account for laches, refused on the ground that the agreement, notwithstanding it was to be performed, not immediately, but by instalments, & at intervals extending over a long period; & notwithstanding the circumstances averred as to the vicinity of the coal, & its convenience with reference to the co.'s works, & the importance to them of coal of that particular description, was an agreement for works of which the ct. could not undertake the superintendence; for, the applications to the ct. would be incessant, to secure due industry & exertion on the part as well of pltfs. as defts. Semble: upon this ground alone the demurrer would have been allowed. Semble: the benefit to be derived from vicinity of deft.'s coal to co.'s iron works, is one which can be estimated by damages, &, taken alone, is not a ground for specific performance.—POLLARD v. CLAYTON (1855), 1 K. & J. 462; 25 L. 623. —— Contract being one for sale of chattels.]—The ct. will not interfere by injunction to restrain the breach of a contract for the sale & delivery of chattels which it could not specifically perform.

Accordingly, where the lessee of a colliery contracted to raise & deliver to pltfs. all the get of coals in the colliery at a fixed price for five years, & subsequently agreed for the sale of the colliery to other parties:—Held: the ct. had no jurisdiction to grant an injunction to restrain the breach of contract.—FOTHERGILL v. ROWLAND (1873), L. The ct. refused to enforce specific performance of this agreement.

I am of opinion that I ought not to decree specific performance of this agreement. The terms of it are peculiar. . . . So far, there is no doubt that would be a contract by deft. to sell his house & land . . . & no doubt that contract would carry not only the surface, but the mines & minerals under it (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—WILLIAMSON v. WOOTTON (1855), 3 Drew. 210; 61 E. An enfranchisement was effected under the second Act, reserving the minerals to the lord:—Held: the contract had reference to the provisions in those Acts relative to minerals, etc., & the purchaser must complete, notwithstanding this reservation.

Tait became bkpt., & his trustee in bkpcy., by a disposition dated July 28, 1837, which in its narrative part stated there was vested in him as trustee the lands of Campbell, comprehending the superiority & feu duty of the lands of Hillfoot, & that one Moir, who was the successor of Drysdale in the lands of Hillfoot, had become purchaser of the said superiority & feu duty, conveyed " all & whole the town & lands of Hillfoot all as at present possessed by Moir." In 1860 the predecessor of applt., Sir A. Orr, purchased from the same trustee " all & whole the lands of Campbell, including the lands of Hillfoot, with (inter alia) the coals & coalheughs." In 1812 S. demised to B. & W. all those two seams of coal under four closes in D. & other closes for fifty years, from Jan. 1, 1813, at a rent of £105. S. died in 1814, & B. & W. paid the £105 rent to the children of S. In 1815, A., B. & W. & the assignee of N., by a deed, which recited that the former had put up the real estate of S. to sale, & that K. was the highest bidder for certain lots (comprising the four closes in D.), except the seams of coal under the closes, granted, bargained & sold to K. in fee "all the four closes of land before mentioned, with all houses, edifices, buildings, gardens, yards, paths, watercourses, ditches, quarries, woods," etc., "other than & save & except & reserved to S. & W., during the term of thirty years to be computed from Jan. 1 then last, all the mines & beds of coal lying & being within & under those four closes thereinbefore described & therein intended to be granted & conveyed." 653. Covenant for payment "for every acre of coal found"—Whether finding of coal condition precedent to liability.]—Declaration in covenant stated, that pltf., by indenture, granted to deft. all the coals, & mines of coal, under certain land; that deft. covenanted to pay pltf., as the price of the coal so granted, £40 for every statute acre of the coal which should be found under the lands, &, until the price should be fully paid, to pay pltf. £40, part of the price, in each year, by two equal half-yearly instalments, whether the whole of an acre of coal should be gotten in every such year, or not. Averment, that, at the time of the making of the indenture, there were under the lands divers, to wit, 14 acres of coal; & that divers, to wit, 13 acres of the coal still remained under lands, & that £40 for two of the half-yearly instalments of the price for the coal aforesaid became due, & still was in arrear & unpaid, to pltf.:—Held: the finding of coal was not a condition precedent to pltf.'s recovering the annual sum of £40.—JOWETT v. SPENCER (1847), 1 Exch. 647; 17 L. J. Ex. 367; 12 L. T. O. S. 85; 154 E. R. 275, Ex. Ch.

654. Covenant for quiet enjoyment—Whether broken by subsidence—Due to earlier working.]—Deft. being seised in fee of land & coal beneath it, in 1844, let the coal, by a written agreement, to lessees for a term of twenty-five years, with power to enter & work & carry away the coal across the land, & all other powers fit & necessary for the working & carrying. The lessees entered & worked & carried away coal, & after they had ceased, deft., in 1845, conveyed by deed a portion of the land to J., a purchaser, who had previously been through the workings, but was not shown to have any knowledge of the agreement or its terms. By the deed deft. covenanted with J., his appointees, heirs & assigns for title, for quiet enjoyment, & against incumbrances. In 1846 J. appointed the portion of land to pltf., a purchaser, who afterwards built houses thereon, & who had no knowledge of the workings until the land & houses subsided, in 1865. The subsidence was caused by the workings which had been carried on before the conveyance to J. In 1848, the lessees entered the mine & took fireclay, which they had no right to take, & also fragments of coal of nominal value, but these acts did not contribute to cause the subsidence. In 1867, pltf., as appointee of J., sued deft. on the covenants, the declaration alleging as breaches of the covenants for title & quiet enjoyment, that, after pltf. became seised, the lessees entered & worked, whereby the damage was caused:—Held: as to the covenant for title, there was no breach since J. had bought with notice of the workings, & pltf. must be taken to have bought the land without the coal; but even if the agreement constituted a breach, the cause of action was complete in J., & pltf. could not sue upon it; the subsistence of the agreement during pltf.'s possession was not a breach of the covenant against incumbrances, because, although the agreement gave the lessees the privilege of doing certain things upon the surface of pltf.'s land necessary for the working the colliery yet it did not appear that any such thing was or could be necessary to be done; the covenant for quiet enjoyment was not broken by the acts of the lessees in 1848; & the action was not maintainable.

The declaration . . . alleges that pltf. became the purchaser of certain land, which would, of course, include any coal or other mineral underneath it (CLEASBY, B.).— SPOOR v. GREEN (1874), L. R. 9 Exch. 99; 43 L. J. Ex. 57; 30 L. T. 393; 22 W. R. 547.

Ownership of minerals — Express reservation to lord of manor.]—By an Inclosure Act, the comrs. were authorised to apportion to the lord of the manor, in satisfaction for his right & interest as such lord, a certain quantity of the waste in cattle gates. By a subsequent sect., reciting that the waste was of such small value as not to bear the expense of being allotted, the comrs. were empowered to set it out in one inclosure, & to regulate the stint among the owners of land entitled to rights of common, awarding them sheep gates in proportion to their several rights. The proprietors or persons entitled to the greater part of the sheep gates were then empowered, with the consent of the lord, to appoint comrs. to divide this stinted pasture into allotments "to & amongst the proprietors of the common or waste land, in proportion to their respective rights & interests therein." A further sect. reserved to the lord the right "to enjoy, search for, & work all mines, minerals, & other rights & privileges in the waste (except the right to the soil thereof, for which a compensation was thereinbefore directed to be made), in as full, ample, & beneficial a manner as if the Act had not been made":—Held: the effect of the Act was, to take from the lord his right to the soil of the waste, & with it the exclusive right of sporting thereon.—ROBINSON v. WRAY (1866), L. Default having been made of principal & interest, the bank took possession of the mines & appointed a receiver of the income, but did not work the mines. They afterwards brought a foreclosure action against the colliery co., & moved for a receiver & manager of the colliery:—Held: (1) although the business of the colliery was not expressly mentioned in the mtge. deed, it was intended to pass & did pass to the mtgees., & they were entitled to apply in the action for a receiver & manager of the colliery; (2) the ct. would, in the exercise of its discretion, appoint a receiver & manager, although the mtgees. had taken possession & appointed a receiver of the income.

659. —— ——.]—This was a motion by pltf., the mtgee. of certain collieries, for the appointment of a receiver. Defts. had a cross motion for an order preventing pltf., who was lessee of part of the colliery, from denying them access to the colliery for the purpose of inspecting it. There was a covenant in the lease that the lessor & his agents should be at liberty to inspect the colliery, but it was said that there was a personal objection to the persons nominated by the lessor to inspect the colliery, & that at the time the lease was signed the lessor verbally promised not to employ those particular persons to inspect. Defts. alleged that pltf. was making use of his position as mtgee. to prevent any one else taking a lease of the colliery. The judge thought that pltf. was entitled to the appointment of a receiver, & that defts. were entitled to inspect the colliery.—BARNETT v. WHITE, WHITE v. BARNETT (1897), 41 Sol. Jo. 607.

I should say . . . that the tenants would not under this instrument be able to exercise the rights that would be indispensable to the proper working of the mines, without some deed under the seal of the grantor; & consequently I think we are justified in saying that, regard being had to the intention of the parties as manifested by the instrument, & to the subject-matter, it does not amount to an actual demise (TINDAL, C.J.).—DOE d. 666. Do not import existence of minerals.]—A., on the application of B. & C., agreed to grant them a lease of a vein or seam of coal, called the S. vein, "about two feet thick, with the overlying & underlying beds of clay," on & under a farm called X., at £100 per annum as certain or dead rent, & royalties of 9*d.* per ton for the coal & 4*d.* per ton for the clay: the lessees to have any part of the farm at the rent of £10 per acre, & to expend not less than £500 in the erection of a manufactory & buildings for the purpose of working the coal & clay; way-leave of 1*d.* per ton for foreign coal & clay; lessees to have power to determine the lease at the end of three years on giving one year's notice. On action by A. for specific performance, B. & C. alleged that the S. vein did not exist under the farm, & it was proved that on search it had not been found, but counter-evidence was given to show that the searches were insufficient:—Held: under the agreement, B. & C. had, in consideration of the dead rent reserved, obtained licence to enter & search for the vein, but not a warranty that such vein was to be found; &, accordingly, A. was entitled to specific performance of the contract whether the S. vein existed or not.—JEFFERYS v. FAIRS (1876), 4 Ch. 680. Meaning of words—"Level"—"Deeper than"—"Below."]—(1) Lessees of a coal mine covenanted with the lessors that they would, by a certain time, get all the demised coal in the township of B. "not deeper than or below the level of" the bottom of the A. mine under a certain point at the surface. In an action for breach of the covenant, a question arose whether "level" was used in the ordinary sense, of a horizontal plane, or in a peculiar sense, having reference to the drainage: —Held: evidence was admissible to show the understanding of the term "level," used as in the above lease, among coal miners.

(2) It was referred to an arbitrator to receive evidence as to the meaning of the covenant, according to the custom & understanding of miners, & to state a case for the opinion of the ct. He found that the mine was situate within an extensive coal mining district in the county of Lancaster; & that, "according to the custom & understanding of miners throughout that district," the terms "level," "deeper than," & "below," signified, etc.; stating the construction of the terms, which was in favour of deft. It did not appear, as to some of the parties to the lease, that they resided within the district, & they were named, in the lease as of other places :—Held: the existence of the custom stated, in the district wherein the mine lay, did not raise a conclusion of

685. Discrepancy between parcels & plan.]—An award defined the southern boundaries of the P. F. Level Colliery thus: "commencing at the point where the said level struck the coal, & extending in an eastward direction as deep as the said level will drain." There was an old existing excavation, termed by miners a level, not horizontal, but running upward into the coal eastward from the point where it struck the coal bed. This excavation was described on the plan annexed to the award as the line of boundary:—Held: this existing old level was the boundary meant by the award & not an imaginary mathematical line drawn horizontally eastward from the point where the old excavation struck the coal.—BRAIN v. HARRIS (1855), 10 Exch. 908; 24 L. 686. ——.]—Parcel or no parcel is a question of fact for the jury, but the judge is bound to tell the jury what is the proper construction of any documents necessary to be considered in the decision of that question. In a "sett" or lease of a mine, the boundary line was thus described, "a line drawn from J. V.'s house, to a boundstone"; & in the description of the parcels in the lease, it was said, "which said premises are particularly described by the map on the back of this sett." On this map the boundary line appeared to be drawn from the north-east corner of the house. R. 274.

697. —— —— ——.]—A declaration stated, that by deed, pltf. let to defts. a certain mine of rock salt for twenty-one years from June 25, 1851: & defts. covenanted with pltf. that they would in every year during the term, get & raise from the mine 2,000 tons of rock salt, & in case of default would, at the expiration of the year, pay pltf. 6*d*. a ton for every ton by which the quantity was less than 2,000: & also that they would, with all reasonable diligence, sink a shaft to the salt rock in order to get at the salt: & would also during the continuance of the term, work the mine in a proper & workmanlike manner. First breach: that although defts. did not raise or get out of the mine the annual quantity of 2,000 tons of salt, yet they have not paid for the quantity short of 2,000 tons. Second breach: that defts. did not in every year of the term get & raise 2,000 tons, & did not pay for the quantity short of 2,000 tons, but on the contrary got & raised no salt whatever, & refused to pay pltf. any sum whatever. Third breach: that they did not use all reasonable diligence to sink a shaft to the salt rock in order to get at the salt; but wholly omitted & neglected so to do. Fourth breach: that defts. did not during the continuance of the term work the mine in a proper & workmanlike manner, but permitted the same to be unworked. Defts. pleaded, secondly: that the deed provided that in case the rock salt should, during the continuance of the term, fail by any inevitable accident, then, on payment of all rent due & performance of all covenants on the part of defts. the term should cease & determine to all intents & purposes whatsoever; that the salt during the continuance of the term failed by inevitable accident; that all rent due was paid & covenants performed; & thereupon the term ceased & determined. Thirdly to the third breach: that defts. did with all reasonable diligence sink a shaft to the salt rock. Fourthly to the fourth breach: that defts. did at all times during the continuance of the term work the mine in a proper & workmanlike manner. Upon which pleas issued were joined. At the trial it appeared that by an agreement in writing, dated Aug. 29, 1851, pltf. agreed, before March 25, then next, to demise to defts. the salt mine in question for twenty-one years from June 25, 1851. When the agreement was executed, defts. began to sink a shaft for the purpose of getting the salt. This sinking was, in Sept. 1851, discontinued in consequence of an influx of brine. Defts. thereupon began to sink another shaft which was in the same month discontinued from the like cause. On Nov. 16, 1852, a lease, pursuant to the agreement, was executed, being the deed declared on & which contained the proviso for cesser stated in the second plea. In consequence of the influx of brine before mentioned defts. never in any manner worked the mine, nor paid any of the rents. The jury found that defts. could not have worked the mine by any reasonable application of labour, diligence, skill, money or other means, & that they were prevented from working it by the influx of brine:—Held: (1) as the term commenced in point of interest on Nov. 16, 1852, though its duration as to computation of time was to be reckoned from June 25, 1851, the proviso for cesser, which referred to a failure by inevitable accident during the continuance of the term, never came into operation; & as defts. had entered into an absolute unqualified covenant to get 2,000 tons of rock salt in each year, or pay for the deficiency, they were liable; for whether the salt could be got easily or with difficulty, or whether it existed at all, was immaterial; (2) pltf. was entitled to the verdict on the issue raised by the third plea, for defts. having, after their inability to reach the salt by reason of the influx of brine, covenanted with all reasonable diligence to sink the shafts down to the salt, they were bound to do so, although it might be an unreasonable application of time & labour; (3) pltf. was also entitled to the verdict on the issue raised by the last plea, since defts. must be taken to have covenanted to work the mine in some way, in as prudent & proper a manner as they could under the circumstances, & therefore had no right to abandon the works altogether.

Semble: if the lease had been executed before the interruption of the works by the influx of brine, that would have been "a failure by inevitable accident" within the proviso for cesser.—JERVIS v. TOMKINSON (1856), 1 H. & N. 195; 26 L. 698. —— Covenant to work mine — Mine only workable by shaft.]—A lease contained various clauses which spoke of pits or shafts to be sunk on demised premises, but did not contain any express covenant by which the lessees were either bound to sink a pit, or to work the mines; & it was also doubtful whether the lessees were empowered to work the demised mines by "outstroke":—Held: no covenant could be implied from the preceding covenant, which imposed upon the lessees, upon the mines being worked, & manure being made within them, the obligation of sinking a pit or shaft upon demised lands, although they might be liable for a breach of covenant in working the mines by outstroke.

If there were a positive covenant to work the mines, I own I feel strongly impressed with the opinion that there would be a covenant on the part of the lessees to make a pit for the purpose, because the mines can only be worked by means of a pit on the demised premises, or by means of outstroke pits (PARKE, B.).—JAMES v. COCHRANE (1852), 7 Exch. 170; 21 L. 699. —— —— In best & most approved mode.] — WHEATLEY v. WESTMINSTER BRYMBO COAL CO., No. 707, post.

700. —— —— In "proper & workmanlike manner."]—The owner of a piece of land agreed to demise the seams of coal under the land to the owners of an adjoining colliery, at a royalty on each ton of coal worked, & at a dead rent of £500 if the royalties did not amount to so much; the dead rent not to be charged for the first three years if the necessary steps were bonâ fide taken with ordinary despatch to win & work the coal. The lease was to contain a covenant by the lessee for working the coal in a proper & workmanlike manner. The lessees proceeded to work the coal by instroke or headings from their adjoining colliery, which was situated to the rise of the seams agreed to be demised; the lessor alleged that the lessees ought to sink a pit & work the coal from the deep & filed a bill to restrain them from working from the adjoining colliery, & to compel payment of the dead rent, on the ground that they had not taken the necessary steps to win & work the coal:—Held: (1) under the circumstances, working the coal by instroke was working in a proper & workmanlike manner, & if the lessor had intended to compel the lessees to sink a pit, it should have been provided for in the agreement.

A proper & workmanlike manner may not mean the best possible mode of working for the lessor, but it means in such a manner as shall not be simply an attempt to get out of the earth as much mineral as can be got for the particular purpose of the lessee, regardless of any ordinary or workmanlike proceeding (LORD HATHERLEY, C.).

(2) I conceive that the coal is won when it is put in a state in which continuous working can go forward in the ordinary way (LORD HATHERLEY, C.).—LEWIS v. FOTHERGILL (1869), 5 Ch. App. 103, L. C.

701. —— —— ——.]—A tenant for life, with certain powers of leasing, demised the seams & veins of coal under a piece of land for twenty-one years, & for sixty years if the tenant for life had power so to do; with liberty for the lessee to search for, dig, raise, & sell the coal, & to make any pits or works, & to take surface land, paying for the damage; & the lessee covenanted to work the mines in a proper & workmanlike manner, & to deliver up at the end of the term the works, seams, & veins of coal in good repair & condition, so that the said coal works might be continued. The lessees worked the demised coal by instroke from an adjoining colliery, situate to the rise of the coal in the demised land, & did not sink a pit so as to work the demised coal from the deep. They kept no barrier between the two collieries, so that water & air passed from their other colliery through the demised colliery into a lower colliery. They also continued to work the demised coal after the expiration of the lease for twenty-one years, claiming to be entitled for sixty years; which claim was, after much litigation, decided to be invalid as against the reversioner:—Held: (1) under the circumstances, working by instroke was working in a proper & workmanlike manner, & the lessees were not bound to sink a separate pit for the demised coal; (2) the value of the coal raised by the lessees after the expiration of the twenty-one years' lease was to be paid for by them at its fair market value, as if they were purchasers, all expenses of hewing & raising being allowed; (3) under the terms of the lease, the lessees were not liable to damages for not working the coal continuously; (4) the lessees were not bound to keep up a barrier so as to prevent air & water from flowing through the lessor's mine, & were not liable to pay for wayleave or air-leave; (5) the lessees were liable for any damage done beyond the removal of coal by working the mine since the determination of the twenty-one years' lease, & must also pay for wayleave, or for the passage of coal through the lessor's mine since the determination of the lease.

(6) I think that the milder rule of law is certainly that which ought to guide this ct., subject to any case made of a special character which would induce the ct. to swerve from it: otherwise, on the one hand, a trespass might be committed with impunity if the rule in poenam were not insisted upon; so, on the other hand, persons might stand by & see their coal worked, being spared the expense of winning & getting it (LORD HATHERLEY, C.).

(7) It is said, that because the lessee covenants that he will do the work in a workmanlike manner, he has covenanted to be always working. But there are various approved modes of effecting such a purpose. One is to take so heavy a dead rent as to make the lessee find it to his own benefit to work, because the rent must be paid whether he works the mine or not. Another mode is to have an express covenant that he shall continuously work. Another mode is to say that so much coal shall be raised per annum; but to say that this is to be implied from a covenant to work in a workmanlike manner would be a very great stretch of the terms actually employed (LORD HATHERLEY, C.).

(8) Both sides most probably thought that pits would be sunk, but that does not amount in my mind to a covenant to make them (LORD HATHERLEY, C.).—JEGON v. VIVIAN (1871), 6 Ch. App. 742; 40 L. J. Ch. 389; 19 W. R. 365, L. C.

702. —— In absence of express covenant.]—In the absence of express contract, the lessee of a mine is entitled to work the minerals by "instroke."—WHALLEY v. RAMAGE (1862), 10 W. R. 315.

703. —— - —— Intention of parties apparent from lease.]—(1) Semble: suffering a seam of the mine, where workings had been formerly carried on but were discontinued, to be filled with water, whereby the air courses in that seam were interrupted, was not a breach of the covenant to keep the levels, drifts & necessary staples for air in good repair, order, & condition.

(2) We agree in the reasoning to be found in the judgments of the members of the ct. below; hardly perhaps, going so far as to say that the sinking of a pit was anticipated when the lease was framed. We should think it more correct to say, that it was considered a possible, perhaps a not unlikely event (COLERIDGE, J.).—JAMES v. COCHRANE (1853), 8 Exch. 556; 22 L. J. Ex. 201; 20 L. T. O. Pltf. having sued defts. for a breach of this covenant, gave evidence to show that if defts. had sunk the pit, marketable coal might have been found:—Held: pltf. was entitled to more than nominal damages, & the true measure of damage was the amount which he had lost by being deprived of the opportunity of finding marketable coal.—PELL v. SHEARMAN (1855), 10 Exch. 766; 156 E. At the end of the term, the lessee, alleging that there was a deficiency in the coal, & that, from "inevitable causes," it was impossible to get two acres annually, & that during the term he had paid for more than he had got, sought to recover back the excess. i. In General.

723. Reservation of annual sum.]—In covenant on an indenture of demise of a coal mine, made on July 8, 1805, reserving a quarter of the coal raised or the value in money at the election of the lessor; & if the quarter fell short of £400 per annum, then reserving such additional rent as would make up that annual sum, to be rendered monthly in equal portions:—Held: the lessor having elected to take the whole in money may declare for two years & three months' rent in arrear. Supply of burning lime—Obligation to burn lime.]—Where a lessee covenanted that he would at all times & seasons of burning lime supply the lessor & his tenants with lime at a stipulated price for the improvement of their lands & repair of their houses:—Held: this was an implied covenant also that he would burn lime at all such seasons, & it was not a good defence to plead that there was no lime burned on the premises out of which the lessor could be supplied.—SHREWSBURY (EARL) v. GOULD (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 487; 106 E. 727. Whether payable on coal consumed in working.]—Deft., lessee of mine S. took a lease of B. an adjoining mine, from pltf., by which he was entitled to get the coal from B. mine at a certain rent, & also to be at liberty to bring the coal got in the A. mine to the surface by way of "outstroke" through the B. mine, on payment of 1½*d.* per ton for outstrokes, watercourse rent, & shaft rent. No rent was to be paid for any coal got from the B. mine which should be used or consumed on or for any engine employed in working or carrying on the mines demised:—Held: no rent was payable for coal used in working the engine of B. mine when employed in bringing up the coal from the A. mine, such engine being at the same time used for keeping B. mine free from water.

The question has reference to the coal got from the Evanrigg mine & raised by outstroke through the Ellenborough colliery; it being contended on the part of deft. that he is entitled to convey the coal so raised, by the tramway in question, without payment of the 2½*d.* per ton. . . . Our judgment upon this point is adverse to deft. (COCKBURN, C.J.).—SENHOUSE v. HARRIS (1862), 5 L. T. 635.

728. Rate of royalty in dispute—Payment into court of lower rate ordered.]—Pltfs. commenced an action against deft. for specific performance of an agreement for a lease of a coal mine by pltfs. to deft. at a royalty, as pltfs. alleged, of 10*d.* per ton. Deft. counter claimed to have specific performance with a royalty of less amount. Deft. was in possession & raising & selling large quantities of coal, but he alleged that he had expended on the mine more than the value of the coal raised. He also brought an action against pltfs. in the Q. B. Div. to obtain damages for misrepresentations alleged to have been made to him for the purpose of inducing him to enter into the agreement, which action was still pending. Pltfs. moved for an interlocutory order that deft. might be ordered to pay into ct. the amount of royalties at 10*d.* per ton on the coal he had raised:—Held: although it would not be right, while the rate of royalty was in dispute, to order deft. to pay into ct. the amount of royalties at the rate claimed by pltfs. he ought to be ordered to pay in the amount of royalties at the rate which he himself alleged to be the one agreed upon, & that as his carrying away coal diminished the value of the property he would not have the usual option of giving up possession instead of paying money into ct.—LEWIS v. JAMES (1886), 32 Ch. The lease contained this covenant: "yielding & paying to the lessor, his heirs, etc., for every quantity of 2,520 lbs. of coal, ironstone, etc., the produce of any lands or mines not intended to be included in the present demise, but which shall be raised within the distance of twenty miles from any part of the premises hereinbefore expressed to be demised, & shall be brought through, over, or under the said lands, etc., the royalty or sum of one half-penny." P. afterwards granted an underlease of a part of the surface of the land A. to a railway co. which made sidings thereon, for the purpose of more conveniently & safely shunting trains for a time, before forwarding them to their destination. Trains containing minerals raised within the twenty miles, often mixed with minerals in no way coming within the words of the covenant, & sent by other cos. upon the line, were frequently, for safety & convenience, shunted for a time on the sidings formed on the land A., & afterwards taken out & conveyed to their destination:—Held: the minerals raised within the described distance did come within the words of the covenant, even though brought on the land only for the temporary purpose of being shunted there, & were therefore liable to the payment of the royalty.—GREAT WESTERN RY. 740. —— ——.]—In pursuance of an arrangement made on behalf of a joint stock co. with certain persons to purchase the beneficial interest in a colliery lease agreed to be granted to them for a term of forty years, a lease was granted in Mar. 1842 to three persons, as trustees for the co., for a period of forty years, at a fixed rent, together with a royalty. The lease contained a stipulation enabling the lessees, at the end of any period of three years from its commencement, to determine the lease by giving twelve months' notice. The co. entered into possession in Dec. 1841, & remained in such possession till Nov. 1842, when the working proving unprofitable was abandoned & never afterwards resumed. In Jan. 1850 the co. was dissolved, & its affairs ordered to be wound up under the provisions of Joint Stock Co.'s Winding-up Acts. The lessor became bkpt. in Aug. 1853. Some time prior to his bkpcy. his interest in the mine became vested in pltf. In May, 1852, the official manager of the co., under protest that the lease was not binding on the co., gave notice to terminate the lease on May 31, following, when one of the triennial periods expired. On Feb. 23, 1853, pltf. filed his bill against the official manager of the co., praying a declaration that the co. had accepted the lease & were bound thereby, & that the official manager might be ordered to pay the arrears of the stipulated rent since Mar. 1842, together with compensation for all breaches of covenant:—Held: no relief in the nature of specific performance, nor any equitable relief, could be granted either against the persons to whom the demise was made or against the co. in respect of their occupation, the rights of pltf., if any, being legal.—WALTERS v. NORTHERN COAL MINING CO. The lease also provided that if L. or M. became bkpt. it should, in the option of the lessor, become void. Shortly after the commencement of the lease L. became bkpt. & M. died, but the lessor never exercised his option to determine the lease:—Held: by the terms of the clause of obligation the lessees were conjointly & severally liable for rent irrespective of their interest, & after M.'s death, his representatives, though they had no interest as tenants, remained liable for rent during the currency of the lease.—BURNS v. BRYAN (OR MARTIN) (1887), 12 App. Cas. 184.

745. Effect of covenant for indemnity by assignee.]—A., the lessee of certain coal mines, for a term of years, by indenture assigned the same to B. for the unexpired residue of his term, B. covenanting that he, his exors., etc., would, at all times during so long as he or they should be in possession or receipt of the rents, produce, & profits of the premises, pay to the lessors the rents, galeages, & wayleaves reserved & made payable by the original lease, & observe & perform all other the covenants therein contained, & would at all times thereafter keep harmless & indemnified A., his heirs, etc., from & against the rents, covenants, etc., in the said lease, & from & against all actions, etc., for & in respect of the same covenants, or otherwise in relation thereto. In covenant by A. against B. upon this indenture, the declaration assigned two breaches, non-payment of the rents & galeages, etc., accruing whilst B. was in possession or receipt of the rents, produce, & profits of the premises, & that B. had neglected to keep A. indemnified. Plea, to the whole declaration, that, at the times when the said rents & galeages became due, B. was not in possession or receipt of the rents, produce, or profits by the indenture assigned, etc.:—Held: the issue raised by this plea was an immaterial issue, inasmuch as the restrictive words, " so long as B., his exors., etc., should be in possession or receipt of the rents, produce, & profits of the premises," did not extend to the covenant to indemnify; &, consequently, the jury having found for deft. on the issue joined on that plea, A. was entitled to judgment non obstante veredicto.—CROSSFIELD v. MORRISON (1849), 7 C. rents, reservations, etc.; & with liberty to deft., during the demise to use, jointly with J., a railway then on the land demised; deft. covenanting to repair the same, or to do so jointly with others who might use it; he having leave to divert it at his own expense if he thought fit.

J., during the demise, assigned to pltf. "the said rents, reservations & royalties, & all other the estate, right, title," etc., of J., "of, in, or in respect of the said demised premises; & the benefit of the said covenants in the said lease contained."

In an action by pltf. to recover arrears in lieu of royalties, accrued since the assignment:—Held: by the deed of J. in 1846, a rent was created, & not a mere covenant in gross; such rent was assignable, & pltf., as assignee of J., could sue deft. for such rent.—WILLIAMS v. HAYWARD (1859), 1 E. & E. 1040; 28 L. Defenders were tenants of the coal seams under said lands, but the mineral field worked by defenders comprised also coal seams under lands belonging to several adjoining proprietors which were worked by pursuers on the said lands of A. The whole was to be worked as one general scheme. Pursuers sought to enforce as absolute against defenders the following prohibition contained in a minute of agreement of the same date of the leases: "The second parties, defenders, hereby undertake & bind themselves & their foresaids that from & after . . . they will work the coal in the adjoining properties only to such an extent as to enable them to pay the several proprietors thereof such sums of lordship as will amount to but not exceed the fixed rents agreed by their existing leases to be paid to such proprietors respectively. In consideration whereof the first party . . . renounces from & after . . . the right to exact the wayleave of one penny per ton presently payable to him":—Held: the clause was an absolute prohibition & not one giving defenders a licence to work as much coal as they pleased from beneath the adjoining lands so long as they paid the stipulated one penny per ton.—FORREST v. MERRY & CUNINGHAME, LTD., [1909] A. (a) In General.

752. Covenant to work all mines to be discovered or opened—None actually discovered or opened.]—By an indenture of lease, pltf. demised to deft. all mines & beds of coal, etc., which then had been, or thereafter, during the demise should be discovered or opened under the lands belonging to Dyffryn House, at the yearly rent of £20, to be paid whether any coal should be worked or not, together with 7*d.* per ton for every ton of coal, etc., raised. & deft. covenanted that he would at all times during the demise work the said mines in a proper & workmanlike manner. Breach, that deft. did not work said mines in a proper & workmanlike manner, but, on the contrary, permitted the mines to lie & the same were wholly ungotten. Plea, that the said mines were never at any time before the said demise worked or gotten, nor did he, deft., at any time since or during the demise, work or get the mines:—Held: on demurrer, inasmuch as it appeared by the pleadings that the mines had not been worked at all, deft. was not liable on this covenant for not working them in a workmanlike manner, the subject matter of demise being, not all the mines under the lands specified, but only such as either had been or should be discovered or opened.—QUARRINGTON v. ARTHUR (1842), 10 M. & W. 335; 11 L. The lease contained special covenants, first, that the working should not be delayed beyond six years from the date of the lease; also, that as to three mines the lessees should be at liberty either to work or relinquish them, & that they should not assign the lease without the consent in writing of the lessors, except to responsible tenants. In 1835 the lessees gave up working the iron mine, as it was not remunerative, & in 1845 the working of the coal mines was also discontinued; but though the mines were not worked the rent was still paid & received. In the meantime considerable correspondence took place, but it was not until 1860 that any decidedly hostile step was taken by the lessors, who, on June 30, in that year, brought an

X. & Y. for forty-two years, & upon further trust, at the request of the lessees, to execute a further lease for twenty-one years, & upon the execution of the lease to reconvey to A. & B. By a deed of Oct. 7, C. demised the premises to B. X. & Y. for forty-two years, reserving as the surface rent, £100 & certain royalties in respect of the minerals; & C. covenanted with the lessees to execute a further lease for twenty-one years; & the lessees covenanted among other things, "that the mines should be fairly got & regularly worked to as little disadvantage as possible to C. his exors. etc." By a deed of Oct. 8, C. conveyed to A. the premises & the accruing rents, subject to the lease, & reserving to C. a power to grant the further lease. In 1796, B. conveyed his reversion in fee in the mines to M. & T. as tenants in common. The mines were worked & royalties paid till 1815, at which time it was admitted the mines were "drowned out." The surface was occupied by pltfs. with iron works, & the rent of £100 regularly paid to the parties entitled up to the present time. On June 21, 1833, the lessees applied to M. & T. to concur in the grant of the further lease; & on July 3, M. & T. declined to comply, denying the right of the lessees. On June 27, 1836, the assignees of the lease filed their bill, stating the trust in C. & the covenant to renew, & praying a specific performance of the covenant as to the mines:—Held: the laches of pltfs. in filing their bill would, if the case depended on the covenant alone, have been a bar to the relief; the prayer of the bill being confined to specific performance of the covenant, would not preclude the ct., under the general prayer, from entertaining the question of the trust, as it was no surprise on defts.; under the covenant, "that the mines should be fairly got & regularly worked," etc., the lessees were bound to continue the working, if practicable; & an issue must be directed, as to whether the "drowning out" of the mines, on their continuance in that state, was by any default of the plaintiffs.—WALKER v. JEFFREYS (1842), 1 Hare, 341; 11 L. 755. ——.]—Deft. demised to pltfs. a coal mine for a term of twenty-one years, subject to the payment of a sleeping rent & of certain royalties according to the amount of coal worked. The lease contained a covenant by the lessees to work the mine in "a fair, honest & workmanlike manner, delays, or stoppages by accidents, or other unavoidable cause, only excepted"; & also a proviso for re-entry in case of any "material breach" of lessees' covenants. Pltfs. proceeded to work the mine under their lease, & continued working until stopped by water, which flowed into & drowned the mine, &, although they made every effort to pump out the water, they were at length forced to discontinue the workings. Notwithstanding the offer of pltfs. to continue paying the sleeping rent, deft. refused to accept it, & commenced an action of ejectment against pltfs. for an alleged breach of covenant in having ceased to work the mine:—Held: there was no obligation on pltfs. to work beyond the sleeping rent, & they were consequently entitled to suspend their works as long as they thought fit, provided they paid the rent.—SIMPSON v. INGLEBY (1872), 26 L. 758. Heavy pecuniary loss—Excuse for non-working.]—By a mining lease a seam of coal under land of lessors was demised for a term of years at an annual rent, & until the working began at a nominal dead rent, & lessees covenanted that they would at all times during the term fairly, duly & honestly win, work & get the whole of the seam in a proper & workmanlike manner. Owing to difficulties in working it was found to be impossible to work the coal without heavy pecuniary loss, & lessees therefore abandoned the undertaking:—Held: upon the true construction of this particular lease lessees had broken their covenant, & were liable in damages to lessors.—CHARLESWORTH v. WATSON, [1906] A. The mines in question were surrounded by mines belonging to other persons also leased to the same lessees, & worked by them from pits sunk on such adjoining lands, & it was the intention of the lessees to work the mines in question from such pits after they had worked through the intervening coal, & there was evidence that this was the proper & usual way of working. It would have been physically possible to sink pits on the land of lessor, & to work the mines in that way, but the expense of so doing would have been out of all proportion to the resulting profit. In fact the lessees did not work through the intervening coal during the term of the lease, & the demised mines were not worked at all:—Held: lessees had committed a breach of the covenant for which they were liable in damages to lessor.—WIGAN COAL & IRON CO. v. ECKERSLEY (1910), 103 L. 760. Effect of qualification of covenant—As long as mine "fairly workable."]—Tenant agreed to work a coal mine so long as it was "fairly workable." There were coals in the mine, but of such a description that it would not pay to work it:—Held: in these circumstances the tenant was not bound to work the mine & under the words "fairly workable" a tenant was not bound to work at a dead loss.—JONES v. SHEARS (1836), 7 C. & P. 346, N. 761. —— "Consistent with means of sale."]—Where lessee of a brickfield, contrary to the covenants in his lease, caused the fall of one of the fences bounding the field, by excavating the clay from under it:—Held: a covenant in the lease binding lessee to "get the demised clay to the fullest practicable extent consistent with the means of sale of bricks & tiles to be made therefrom," did not bind lessee to go on working at a loss, even though a means of sale, at an unremunerative rate, might have been found for bricks made out of the demised clay.—NEWTON v. NOCK (1880), 43 L. T. 197.

762. —— Minerals insufficient in quantity or quality.]—(1) A lessee of furnaces, ironworks & ironstone mines covenanted to work the furnaces effectually, unless prevented by inevitable accident or want of materials, or unless the ironstone should be insufficient in quantity or quality, or would not, by itself, or with a proper mixture or process, make good common pig-iron:—Held: the mixture intended was not necessarily of ingredients procurable on the demised premises.

(2) The lease also contained a covenant to raise a certain quantity of ironstone in each quarter of a year, & pay certain royalties on it, or else to pay a certain fixed quarterly rent to the landlords:—Held: the landlords having declared in respect of breaches of both the above covenants, & money having been paid into ct. & accepted in satisfaction of the latter, were entitled to nominal damages only in respect of the former.

(3) The lease contained a covenant to repair & yield up in repair the furnaces, fire engine, iron works, dwelling-houses, & all other erections, buildings, improvements, & alterations to be thereafter erected, built or set up, except the ironwork castings, railways, wimseys, gins, machines, & the movable implements & materials used in or about the said furnaces, fire engine, iron works, stone pits, & premises; & there was a power given to lessors to purchase those articles, giving a certain notice before the expiration of the lease:—Held: defts. had a right to remove whatever was in the nature of a machine or part of a machine, but not what was in the nature of building or support of building, although made of iron; & in such removal the defts. might disturb such brickwork as was necessary, & were not bound to restore it to a perfect state, as if the article it was intended to support or cover were still there; but defts. were liable for any unnecessary disturbance of brickwork.—FOLEY v. ADDENBROOKE (1844), 13 M. & W. 174; 14 L. There was no reservation of a minimum rent to be paid in the event of clay not being found or raised. In an action upon this deed, one of the breaches assigned was that deft. had not dug an aggregate amount of not less than 1,000 tons of pipe & potter's clay in each year of the demise that had elapsed. Plea, on equitable grounds, that deft. could not, at any time during the term, dig an aggregate amount of not less than 1,000 tons of pipe & potter's clay in each year, because there was not at the time of the demise, nor at any time since, so much clay under the land in question, & the performance of the covenant was impossible, & such impossibility was, at the time of making the covenant, unknown to deft. & he had no reasonable means of ascertaining it:—Held: on demurrer, the plea was an answer to the breach, as the ct. were of opinion, on the construction of the deed, that it was the intention of the parties that the covenant to dig not less than 1,000 tons of clay in each year should not take effect unless there was clay to that amount in the lands demised.—CLIFFORD

767. Specific performance not decreed.]—Pltfs. granted a lease of a coal mine to defts. reserving a minimum rent of £720, to be increased to £1,000 in case there should be pits sunk upon the estate, with a royalty upon all coal gotten beyond a certain quantity; & the lessees covenanted to work the mine uninterruptedly, efficiently, & regularly, according to the usual or most improved practice. The lessees paid the minimum rent, but only raised a small quantity of coal by working through an adjoining mine without sinking pits on pltfs.' property. Pltfs. being desirous of enforcing a larger amount of working, whereby an increased rental would be payable, filed a bill for specific performance of the covenant in the lease:—Held: there was no obligation upon defts. to sink pits, although that might be the most efficient mode of working; & so long as the minimum rent was paid, defts. could not be compelled to work the mine at all; the lessees had committed no breach of contract; but if they had done so, the remedy was at law & not in equity; & this ct. could not give effect to the covenant by directions as to the management of a coal mine.

In all cases of mining leases, if the lessors desire to secure the working of their mines beyond the amount of the sleeping rent, they must in the lease insert covenants which throw that obligation on the lessee (MALINS, V.-C.).—WHEATLEY v. WESTMINSTER BRYMBO COAL CO. There was a proviso for forfeiture & re-entry on failure in the performance of the covenants.

For some months no fresh clay was got, but only the old stock was worked. The ct. refused to restrain lessors from having possession on the ground of forfeiture for breach of covenant.—KINSMAN v. JACKSON (1880), 42 L. T. 558; 28 W. R. 601, C. A.

773. —— ——.]—By a mining lease, lessors demised to lessees for a term of twenty-one years the whole of a mine of coal, lying under a certain area at a rent, as soon as the lessees should commence working the coal, of £100 for an acre of the coal, & until they should begin to work & get coal, the annual rent of £5. By the lease the lessees covenanted that they should & would at all times during the term thereby appointed "fairly, duly & honestly win work recover obtain & get the whole of the said mine vein or seam of coal demised in a proper & workmanlike manner." Operations with the object of proving the coal, extending over several years & involving a large expenditure, were unsuccessful, & lessees abandoned the working of the mine. The coal within the demised area could in the ordinary course of working have been won & gotten, but the operations would have entailed heavy pecuniary loss upon lessees, & in a commercial sense they acted prudently in abandoning the undertaking. On a claim by lessors to recover damages for breach of covenant:—Held: upon the true construction of the covenant lessees were under an absolute obligation to win & get the coal, & the words "fairly, duly & honestly" in the covenant must be construed as adding to & not limiting that obligation, & consequently there had been a breach of covenant by lessees, for which lessors were entitled to recover as damages the amount which would have been paid to them under the lease if the lessees had won & gotten the coal regardless of pecuniary loss to themselves.

It appears to me that primâ facie the onus rests on the lessees to prove that the coal which they have absolutely covenanted to win does not exist, in order to justify them in throwing up the lease, the covenants of which they have primâ facie broken (COLLINS, M.R.).—WATSON v. CHARLESWORTH, [1905] 1 K. of the mines without working all, or all that they had commenced to work; according to the evidence before the ct. it was the common practice in the district to work a lower seam of coal before working a higher; there was no ground for saying that defts. were committing a breach of the covenant, & the bill was dismissed with costs.

The word "mine" is clearly used in its primary sense of "vein" (JESSEL, M.R.).

In the neighbourhood of the mines the system of working usually adopted was the "long wall" or the "Barry" system, a modification of it, under which systems all the coal was worked & no pillars were left. In an area of forty-two acres, beneath a village in which there were many houses, the lessees worked the lower vein of the two into which the seam there lying was divided on the "pillar & stall" system, under which many large pillars of coal were left to support the surface & houses:—Held: (1) in arriving at the meaning of what was "fair, proper, & workmanlike" working, all the circumstances must be considered, including lessees' obligation to support the surface; (2) the "best mode of working" meant the best under all the circumstances, & even the system in general use, if meant, was only to be used where applicable; (3) the "pillar & stall" system was properly used under the area of forty-two acres; & (4) the covenant as to working seams without injury to others applied to the seven seams demised & not to the two veins of one seam.—BREWER v. RHYMNEY IRON CO., [1910] 1 Ch. 766; 79 L. It also contained a covenant by the lessees to permit the lessor & his agents at all reasonable times to inspect the mine & its workings, & a proviso that on default by the lessees in performing or observing any of the covenants, the lessor might re-enter, & thereupon the lease should be determined. The lessor died in Jan. 1907. On Apr. 26 his exors.' agent was refused inspection of the mine by the lessees. On Apr. 29 the exors. gave the lessees notice in writing that they had determined the lease, & on May 3 they, through their agents, demanded possession of the mine. On May 4 they issued a writ against the lessees, claiming (a) recovery of possession of the mine; (b) mesne profits; (c) an injunction to restrain the lessees from working the mine so as to occasion loss or damage to it; (d) an order on the lessees to allow inspection of the mine & its workings; (e) a receiver; & (f) damages:—Held: (1) having regard to the form of the proviso for re-entry in the lease, actual re-entry or its equivalent, the issue of a writ claiming possession simpliciter was necessary in order to determine the lease, & the notices of Apr. 29 & May 3 were ineffectual for that purpose; (2) the claim in the writ for possession was inconsistent with the claim for an injunction, & the writ was not therefore an unequivocal demand for possession so as to operate as a final election by the exors. to determine the lease.

789. —— "Erections, buildings & improvements"—Removal of furnace.]—The first [question] related to the damage claimed by pltfs. in respect of a furnace erected by defts. on certain demised premises, & removed by them. The lease contained a covenant to keep & leave in repair all & every the furnace, fire engine, dwelling-houses, & all other erections & buildings & improvements whatsoever, to be thereafter erected or set up & continued, & in two antecedent clauses of the lease, power was expressly given to set up, & afterwards from time to time remove all fire engines, cranks, whins & other machines; & by another clause power was given to set up furnaces, mills, houses for workshops, stables & other erections, but without any express power, in either case, to remove them. . . . The learned judge was of opinion that no damage ought to be assessed on this head & we think he is right. . . . There is no question here of any colourable removal of the furnaces, for the furnaces had been discontinued, as to the working, fifteen or twenty years, yet taken down long before, in the year 1839 (POLLOCK, C.B.).—ADDENBROOKE v. BOTFIELD (1848), 12 L. T. O. S. 220.

791. —— "Erections, fences & fixed machinery"—Removal of trade fixtures.] — In 1905 M. granted a mining lease to the predecessors in title of the co. whereby the lessees covenanted, clause 13, that "at the end or sooner determination of the term all erections, fences & fixed machinery in the demised seams or on the surface of the said premises shall be left in good repair & condition by lessees." The working of the coal proved unremunerative & certain holders of debentures issued by the co. brought an action to enforce their security, & obtained the appointment of a receiver. In pursuance of an order in the action, the receiver, during the existence of the term, sold the machinery & plant upon the premises, & paid the proceeds into ct. Upon a motion by M. for a declaration that certain articles of machinery sold by the receiver were fixed machinery or erections within clause 13:—Held: clause 13 operated to deprive the tenants of their right to remove trade fixtures, & as the articles in question had been severed & sold during the term M. was entitled to affirm the sale & to recover the proceeds immediately without waiting until the end of the term.—Re BRITISH RED ASH COLLIERIES, LTD., [1920] 1 Ch. 326; 88 L. 792. Covenant to erect & repair smelting mill—Runs with reversion.]—(1) Where a lease of an undivided third part of certain mines contained a recital of an agreement made by lessee with lessor, & the owners of the other two thirds, for pulling down an old smelting mill, & building another of larger dimensions, upon a waste near the mines, & the lease contained a covenant to keep such new mill in repair, & so leave it at the expiration of the term, but did not contain a covenant to build it:—Held: such a covenant was to be implied, & lessor of the one third might sue upon it in respect of his interest. (2) The lease contained a demise of all mines & minerals then opened or discovered, or which might during the term be opened or discovered, in or under certain moors & waste lands; & also all smelting mills then standing upon the said lands, with full liberty to sink shafts there, & to build thereon any mills or other buildings requisite for working the mines, habendum said demised premises, with the appurtenances for twenty-one years. Lessor afterwards granted his reversion of & in the said demised premises, with the appurtenances, to G. B., who, by will demised the same to pltfs.:—Held: the covenant to build the new smelting mill tended to the support & maintenance of the thing demised, & the assignee of the reversion might therefore sue upon it.—EASTERBY v. SAMPSON (1830), 6 Bing. 644; 1 Cr. & J. 105; 4 Moo. & P. 601; 130 E. 795. —— How construed — Restoration for all former practical purposes & uses.]—The meaning of a covenant on lessee's part in a mining lease to restore the surface to its original condition, is, that the ground shall be restored for all the practical purposes & uses to which it had been formerly applicable.—HARBY v. EAST & WEST INDIA DOCKS & BIRMINGHAM JUNCTION RY. 796. —— For benefit of owner — Not third party.]—WILSON v. WADDELL, No. 1071, post.

797. —— Breach — Measure of damages.]—Lessee of a mining lease covenanted that from time to time during the lease, or at the expiration thereof, he would put the lands generally into such state & condition as they were in before, or as near thereto as possible, or if he did not that he would pay £100 for every acre not so restored. Damage was done to about 30 acres of land, but the lessee did not restore the same to its former condition:—Held: the lessor was entitled to the sum of £100 for every acre although such sum greatly exceeded the amount of actual damage, as it was evident the parties intended that to be paid in the event of a breach of covenant, & it was not in the nature of a penalty.—Re MEXBOROUGH (EARL) & WOOD (1882), 47 L. T. 516; 47 J. P. 151.

798. Covenant to pay for surface damage — Runs with land.]—A covenant to pay compensation for damage done to the surface by working the mines thereunder is a covenant that runs with the land.

In 1861 S., the owner of an estate in fee, granted a portion of it for the express purpose that certain buildings should be erected thereon by the grantee, but reserved to himself all mines & minerals thereunder, with liberty for himself & his lessees to get & work same for his or their benefit, "but without entering upon the surface of the said premises or any part thereof, so that compensation in money be made by him or them for all damages that shall be done to the said erections on the said plot by the exercise of any of the said excepted liberties or in consequence thereof." The buildings were duly erected on this land by the grantee, & were afterwards conveyed by him to pltfs. in fee. S. subsequently granted to defts. without any reservation, the lands adjacent to pltfs.' buildings & also the right to work the mines under pltfs.' buildings. Defts. who had notice of the compensation clause in the conveyance to pltfs.' predecessors in title, thereupon proceeded to get the minerals both under their own & pltfs.' land by means of mines that had been partially worked prior to 1861, & thereby caused the surface of pltfs.' land to subside, & so did considerable injury to the buildings erected thereon:—Held: (1) the right of the surface owner to compensation was a right of which the law takes notice, & it was therefore a burden which might be annexed to the mine owner's right to work his mines so as to let down the surface, & consequently pltfs. were entitled to recover damages in respect of the injury done to their buildings.

(2) I apprehend there may be a well known & perfectly legal custom that the lord of the manor may get all the minerals under the copyhold lands, paying compensation to a copyhold tenant for any damage he may do to the surface in getting them. Inclosure Acts constantly give the same right (MELLISH, L.J.).—ASPDEN v. SEDDON, PRESTON v. SEDDON (1876), 1 Ex. D. 496; 46 L. J. Q. B. 353; 36 L. T. 45; 41 J. P. 804; 25 W. R. 277, C. A.

799. —— ——.]—In a mining lease granted by the owners of the minerals, who were not owners of the surface, lessee, which expression was to include his exors., administrators & assigns, unless such construction was excluded by the sense or the context, covenanted with lessors & "as separate covenants with other the owner or owners occupier or occupiers for the time being" of surface lands to pay to lessors & other the covenantees or covenantee compensation for all damage occasioned by the working of the coal demised. The lease was assigned to a colliery co. & damage was occasioned to the surface by the co.'s working:—Held: the covenant was not simply collateral, but affected the nature & value of the land & ran with the land, & although the surface owners were not parties to the lease, yet under Real Property Act, 1845 (c. 106), s. 5, & Conveyancing & Law of Property Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 58 (1), the benefit of the covenant might be taken by the devisees of one who was a surface owner at the date of the lease & by the successors in title of others who were surface owners at that date, & they could sue the exors. of the lessee & the colliery co. for compensation for damage done to their surface lands.—DYSON v. FORSTER, DYSON v. SEED, QUINN, MORGAN, ETC., [1909] A. 800. —— ——.]—A landowner, whose predecessors in title had demised the minerals under certain lands to defts., subject to a covenant by defts. with them & their assigns not to let down the surface, & a condition for making compensation for any damage done, granted a lease of the surface of the same lands to pltfs., subject to defts.' lease, reserving liberty to mine without liability for subsidence caused thereby. Defts. having worked the mine so as to let down the surface, thereby causing damage to pltfs.' works, pltfs. brought an action in the County Palatine Ct. of Lancaster for damages & an injunction. The Vice-Chancellor refused the injunction, but granted an inquiry as to damages:—Held: (1) the benefit of defts.' covenant ran with the land & could be enforced by assigns, but pltfs., being merely subsequent lessees without any express assignment of the covenant, were not assigns for that purpose; but (2) pltfs. had under their lease the right of support to the surface so far as it was not taken away by defts.' lease, & defts. were not entitled by their lease to let down the surface without making compensation as required by their lease, therefore pltfs. were entitled to damages for the injury caused by defts.' workings.—WESTHOUGHTON URBAN COUNCIL v. WIGAN COAL & IRON CO., [1919] 1 Ch. 159; 88 L. 802. —— Covenant against drowning out of mine—Removal of pumping machinery.]—Lessee of a mine covenanted by his lease, at the end of the term, if lessor should require it, to leave him all the engines, machinery, things & materials which should have been used in & about the working of the mine upon receiving twelve months' notice from lessor, & being paid for the same according to a valuation. In a subsequent part of the lease it was provided that it should be lawful for lessee at any time or times during the term, or within twelve months after its expiration, to remove all the machinery, engines, things & materials which should be erected or brought by him upon the premises, unless lessor should be minded to purchase same, which he should have liberty to do upon giving the notice thereinbefore mentioned & upon paying the price estimated. The deed also contained a covenant by lessee not to do any act which might occasion or tend to produce the drowning of the mine.

Fourteen years before the expiration of the term lessee became insolvent, & assigned everything he had brought upon the premises to trustees, who gave notice to lessor of their intention to remove same unless he should be minded to purchase. To a bill by lessor, averring that such removal would occasion or tend to produce the drowning of the mine, & praying for an injunction to restrain same until the end of the term, & until pltf. had the opportunity of exercising his option to purchase, a demurrer was allowed, the ct. being of opinion that, according to the true construction of the lease, lessee was to be at liberty to remove all the property in question, unless lessor gave notice of his intention to purchase, & paid for the same.—ROLLESTON v. NEW (1858), 4 K. & J. 640; 70 E. 807. Licence to assign — Form of covenant in sub-lease.]—The lease of certain mines contained a covenant that the lessee should not, without the consent of the lessor, let or assign the mines. The lessor granted to the lessee a licence to sublet a part, but the licence provided that this should not authorise any further letting or assigning of the part of the mines, the subject of the licence, without such consent as was required by the lease. The lessee then agreed to sub-let to an underlessee the part of the mines the subject of the licence, the underlease to contain provisions in all respects like those in the original lease:—Held: according to the agreement the underlease ought to contain a covenant by the underlessee against letting or assigning without the consent of the lessee, & not a covenant against letting or assigning without the consent of the lessor.—WILLIAMSON v. WILLIAMSON (1874), 9 Ch. 808. Remedy for breach — Interim injunction.]—Pltf. demised to deft. certain quarries of hard & soft limestone, with full power & authority to work the quarries; & deft. covenanted not to assign, demise, or part with the said mines, powers, authorities, & premises, or any part thereof, for the whole or any part of the term. There was a right of re-entry for breach of covenant. Deft. sold to certain purchasers marl to be gotten by them from the lands included in the demise, & the purchasers in pursuance thereof worked the marl & took it away:—Held: pltf. had made out a primâ facie case of breach of covenant, & he was primâ facie entitled to an interim injunction until the trial of the action to restrain the further working of the quarries.—MOSTYN (LORD) v. MANGER (1901), 17 T. L. R. 281, C. A.

SUB-SECT. 9.—OTHER COVENANTS.

809. Covenant to deliver up machinery — On exercise of lessor's option to purchase—"At any time."]—A lease of mines contained a covenant that, if the lessor should at any time before the expiration or determination of the lease give notice, in writing, to the lessee, of his desire to take all or any part of the machinery, stock-in-trade, implements, etc., in or about the mines, then the lessee would, at the expiration of the lease, deliver the articles specified in the notice to the lessor on his paying the value of them, such value to be ascertained in the manner therein mentioned:—Held: the covenant was so injurious & oppressive to the lessee, that the ct. ought not to enforce it, or to grant an injunction to prevent a breach of it.—TALBOT v. FORD (1842), 13 Sim. 173; 6 Jur. 843; 60 E. 811. When implied—"Let."]—Deft., who was the tenant for life of a mansion house & grounds under the will of her husband, & also one of his exors. & trustees, agreed to "let" & pltf. agreed to take the mansion house & grounds for a year, & thereafter from year to year, he agreeing to keep the inside of the premises in good & tenantable repair & keep up the vineries & glasshouses. Deft. excepted the minerals, with power to work them, but without any power to let down the surface. Some years previously deft.'s husband had entered into an agreement with the adjoining landowners with a view of granting to a proposed co. a lease of the coal underneath their several properties, but the husband died before this arrangement was carried out, which was eventually carried into effect by his trustees, including deft., who, with the adjoining landowners, joined in demising the coal & the right to work it to trustees, called the demising trustees, who in turn demised the coal & the right to work it to the co. The former of these indentures gave liberty "so far as the owners have power to grant such liberty" to work the seam without leaving any supports, & the second contained a similar clause, but without the qualification. There was no express mention of such a clause in the agreement which deft.'s husband had entered into. By the second indenture the demising trustees reserved so much of the coal as should be necessary for the support of buildings as they should in writing require to be left, & in case serious damage by subsidence were reasonably anticipated the co. were to have power, after notice in writing to the trustees, to leave without paying for it sufficient coal as should be agreed upon for the support of buildings. In the course of working the co. desired to leave a sufficient pillar of coal for the support of the mansion house, but at the instance of deft. the demising trustees withheld their consent to the pillar being left, & as it was worked out, the result was that serious subsidences took place, & pltf. suffered serious damage in his tenancy:—Held: pltf. was entitled to recover, inasmuch as deft. had derogated from her grant, & although the tenancy agreement only contained the word "let" it nevertheless implied a contract for quiet enjoyment, of which there had been a breach by deft.—MARKHAM v. PAGET, [1908] 1 Ch. 697; 77 L. 812. —— —— "To hold demised premises."]—Pltf. sued for rent on a lease of mines; defts. pleaded that pltf. had no title to part, & knew it, but defts. did not, & that the Crown had claimed this part against defts. Defts. also, by way of counterclaim, asked for damages in respect of losses incurred in consequence of pltf.'s want of title:—Held: the words "let" & "to hold the demised premises" in the lease implied a covenant for title & quiet enjoyment for breach of which defts. were entitled to damages.—MOSTYN v. WEST MOSTYN COAL & IRON CO. (1876), 1 C. P. D. 145; 45 L. J. Q. B. 401; 34 L. T. 325; 40 J. P. 455; 24 W. R. 401.

813. What amounts to breach—Working of upper stratum—Causing floods & falls in demised mine.]—By indenture, deft. demised to pltfs. a coal mine for a term of years, with liberty to dig & sink pits, etc., for obtaining the coal; & deft. covenanted with pltfs. that they might peaceably & quietly have, hold, occupy, possess & enjoy the mine during the term, without any molestation, interruption or disturbance whatever of, from, or by deft. After the making of the indenture deft. excavated a quarry of ironstone, lying under some of the closes under which the demised mine was situate, but above that mine; & made holes from the strata of ironstone into the demised mine; & thereby caused quantities of water to percolate into the demised mine; & deft. also by excavating the quarry caused parts of the roof of the demised mine to fall in, & by reason of the premises the demised mine became flooded, & the working of the coal was rendered impracticable:—Held: though deft. had a right to excavate the quarry, yet as the excavation had caused an interruption of pltfs.' occupation of the demised mine, deft. was liable for a breach of his covenant for quiet enjoyment.—SHAW v. STENTON (1858), 2 H. & N. 858; 27 L. t. What amounts to breach—Subsequent grant to placer miner.]—A statement of claim which alleges that the Crown, after granting a lease of areas for subaqueous mining & while that lease was in force, in derogation of the rights of the lessee to peaceable enjoyment thereof, interfered with the rights vested in him by transferring the leased area to placer miners who were put in possession of them by the working their mine, picked away some of the stratum, & in so doing accidentally tapped a natural reservoir or underground lake, the water from which overflowed into & flooded pltf.'s mine:—Held: the interruption of pltfs.' enjoyment of their mine was not caused by an act of the lessor or those claiming under him, but was immediately caused by the overflow of water into their mine, such overflow being a consequence of an act that could not have been foreseen at the time when the lease was granted to pltfs. by deft., &, therefore, there had been no breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment.—HARRISON, AINSLIE & CO. v. MUNCASTER, [1891] 2 Q. 816. Restraint of working—Working inconsistent with prior grant.]—A lease of alum mines gave the lessee the right to obtain alum from certain coal wastes. A subsequent lease of the coal mines provided that nothing thereby granted should injure the rights of the parties who held the alum mines. The alum existed in the coal wastes. The coal lessees could not thoroughly work the coal without removing the pillars which supported the roof; but by doing this, the alum would be rendered impossible to be reached:—Held: the coal pillars could not be removed.—GLASGOW (EARL) v. HURLET ALUM CO. 817. Royalties.]—The proprietor of a house & of a marl pit & brick mine demised the house, by unwritten agreement, to D. from a day named; & it was at the same time agreed between them, without writing, that D. should take the marl pit & the brick mine, & should pay quarterly, at the usual quarter days, 8*d.* per solid yard for all the marl that he got, & 1*s.* 8*d.* per thousand for all the bricks that he made. D. took the marl & made bricks accordingly, & paid the stipulated sums for a time; but they afterwards fell into arrear:—Held: the agreement for the marl pit & brick mine was a demise of the land from year to year, at a rent capable of being ascertained with certainty, & for which, therefore, the lessor might distrain.—DANIEL v. GRACIE (1844), 6 Q. 818. Express power to distrain — Binding on assignees.]—Upon a demise of mines a power of distress for the rent reserved was granted to the lessor over "any lands in which there shall be, for the time being, any pits or openings by or through which the coal or culm by the said deed demised shall for the time being be in course of working by the lessees, their exors., administrators, & assigns." Pltfs., being assignees of the lease with notice, under a trust deed made by the lessees for the benefit of creditors, sued defts. for a distress made under the above-mentioned power after the assignment, at pits not included in the demise, but referred to in it, & then worked by the lessees:—Held: whether the power was or was not a valid power of distress against strangers, pltfs., taking as assignees with notice, were bound by it.—DANIEL v. STEPNEY (1874), L. 819. —— On chattels not on demised premises—Does not constitute bill of sale.]—Mining co., now in liquidation, were lessees from separate lessors, at certain rents & royalties of two adjoining coal mines A. & B. There was no shaft on mine B. & the co. worked both mines by means of a shaft on mine A. In each of the leases the lessor reserved to himself express power to distrain for rent in arrear, not only upon chattels belonging to the lessees on the demised premises, but also upon chattels belonging to the lessees in or about "any adjoining or neighbouring collieries." In Oct. 1896, lessors of mine B. levied a distress upon chattels belonging to the lessees on mine A.:—Held: having regard to the nature of the demise & the manner in which the minerals were worked, the power to distrain upon chattels belonging to the lessees upon adjoining & neighbouring mines did not constitute the mining lease a bill of sale within Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (c. 31), so as to require registration under Bills of Sale Acts.—Re ROUNDWOOD COLLIERY CO., LEE v. ROUNDWOOD COLLIERY CO., [1897] 1 Ch. 373; 66 L. 825. Effect of winding-up order—On landlord's right of re-entry.]—Mines were demised to a co. by a lease which contained a power of re-entry if the rents or royalties, or any part thereof, should be in arrear for thirty days, or if the co. "should be wound up voluntarily or by compulsion or otherwise under the provisions of any Act or Acts of Parliament." An action was brought against the co. by the debenture-holders, & a receiver was appointed. Rent being in arrear, the landlord took out a summons for leave to distrain or re-enter. After the summons had been returnable, but before it was heard, an order was made for winding up the co. The summons was then amended by intituling it in the winding-up as well as in the action:—Held: according to the true construction of the proviso for re-entry, a right to re-enter accrued on the making of a winding-up order, &, the title of the landlord to re-enter being clear, the ct. ought to order possession to be given to him, & ought not to put him to the useless expense of bringing an action to which there was no defence.—GENERAL SHARE & TRUST CO. v. WETLEY BRICK & POTTERY CO. Relief against forfeiture—Refusal by lessee to perform conditions on which relief granted—Right of lessor to enforce condition.]—Pltfs. obtained a judgment for possession against defts. in respect of a breach of a covenant in a mining lease. Defts. appealed, but abandoned the appeal. Subsequently defts. applied for relief, under C. L. P. Act, 1860 (c. 126), against that judgment of forfeiture, & obtained the following order: "It is ordered that upon defts. (a) paying all rent in arrear with interest thereon . . . Defts. remained in possession for some time working the mine & paying the rent. They subsequently refused to proceed on the order giving relief. On an application by pltf. for an order, in effect, to compel defts. to proceed on the order granting relief:—Held: the ct. had no jurisdiction to compel defts. to perform the conditions of the order, but defts. had to pay all the costs of & occasioned by & incidental to their application for relief.—TALBOT v. BLINDELL, [1908] 2 K. Plea, that the whole of the coals comprised in the demise were worked out in the fair & proper course of working the mines. The lease was for the term of twenty-eight years from Sept. 30, 1847, at the royalty of one-eighth of the minerals produced, & contained a proviso that if the minerals should be fully & fairly gotten before the expiration of the term the lessees might determine it on giving twelve months' notice. It appeared that some coal remained in the pit, but it could not be practically worked without costing more than it was worth:—Held: the covenant was absolute, & therefore the plea was no answer.

829. —— Power to determine "at any time"—Notice given during current year.]—By an agreement for the lease of certain ironworks & mines between pltf. & defts., pltf was to grant a lease of the works & mines for twenty-one years, with the usual & customary clauses. The lessees were to be at liberty "at any time" to determine the agreement, or the lease thereby agreed to be granted, "on giving to lessor six months' notice in writing of their intention so to do." Defts. entered into possession of the mines & works on Aug. 19, 1861, under the agreement. No lease was ever granted. The rent of £125 for the second quarter was paid by the lessees, & subsequently a further sum of £250 for the six months ending Aug. 19, 1862. On Aug. 10, 1863, defts. gave notice of their intention to determine the agreement & the tenancy on Feb. 10, 1864. On Nov. 21, 1863, defts. paid to pltf. the sum of £500 in respect of rent for the year ending Aug. 19, 1863:—Held: looking to all the provisions of the lease, defts. had a right to give this notice at any time, & were not bound to give such a notice as tenants from year to year are generally bound to give, namely, a notice expiring at a date corresponding with the commencement of the tenancy.—BRIDGES v. POTTS (1864), 17 C. 833. Effect of clause.]—A colliery lease, which empowered the lessees to carry foreign coal over the surface, provided that all disputes relating to the lease should be referred to arbn. Shortly before the expiration of the term the lessees by letters requested the lessors to grant an extension of the lease on the existing terms for six months, & the lessors wrote in reply that the lessees might consider themselves tenants at will of both mine & wayleave pending further arrangements. The lessors having brought an action against the lessees in respect of their exercise of the wayleave during the tenancy at will, the lessees applied for a stay of proceedings under Arbitration Act, 1889 (c. 49):—Held: upon the construction of the letters, the terms of the lease, including the arbn. clause, applied to the tenancy at will, so far as applicable to such a tenancy, & the proceedings ought to be stayed.—MORGAN v. HARRISON (WILLIAM), LTD., [1907] 2 Ch. 137; 76 L. SUB-SECT. 3.—WHERE TERMS AMBIGUOUS.

842. Insufficiency of description of subject-matter—"Coals, etc."]—One of two tenants in common in fee of lands containing mines of coal & iron entered into a negotiation for a lease of minerals, & wrote a letter stating his willingness to grant a lease on the terms of a paper referred to in the letter. There were two papers, each of which in some respects answered the description in the letter. One of these purported to be terms for letting & taking coals, "etc.," under the lands in question, but contained no more definite description of the minerals which were the subject of it. In a suit by the proposed lessee for specific performance as to the moiety belonging to the tenant in common who had written the letter:—Held: (1) the paper to which the letter referred was not sufficiently identified; (2) even if, as pltf. contended, it was shown to be the above paper, its terms were too indefinite to be capable of being enforced specifically; (3) the contract being for a lease of the entirety, & deft. not having been shown to have made any misrepresentation as to his title or otherwise, it could not be enforced against him as to one moiety only.—PRICE v. GRIFFITH (1851), 1 De G. M. & G. 80; 21 L. J. Ch. 78; 18 L. T. O. S. 190; 15 Jur. 1093; 42 E. R. 482, L. JJ.

843. Insufficiency of description of mineral area.]—Where the agreement for a lease of mineral property did not clearly define the mineral area to be comprised in the lease, the ct. refused, at the instance of the proposed lessee, to decree specific performance of the agreement.—LANCASTER v. DE TRAFFORD (1862), 31 L. J. Ch. 554; 7 L. T. 40; 8 Jur. N. S. 873; 10 W. R. 474.

844. ——.]—In construing the words "or thereabouts" when used to qualify the statement of the estimated quantity of mines agreed to be demised, the same principles ought to be acted upon as would guide the ct. in construing the same words in an agreement for sale or demise of the surface.

In the case of a demise of unworked minerals, there can hardly be said to be actual possession of any part of them except of what the intended lessee is actually working; but I think that when the lessor allows his intended lessee to take possession & the lessee does take possession & commences working accordingly, he must be considered as constructively in possession of all which the lessor has bound himself to demise. I cannot however think that the lessee can be treated by this ct. as constructively in possession of any thing of which the lessor did not intend to put him in possession, & of which this ct. shall say the lessor is not bound to grant a lease (LORD CRANWORTH, C.).

I do not go the length of saying that this is a case in which this ct. would set the agreement aside & order it to be cancelled, as founded in mistake; although I am by no means prepared to say that the ct. would not do so, as the agreement seems to me to have proceeded on both sides upon the footing that the fault was supposed to run in the direction laid down upon the plan, & it has subsequently appeared that it does not in fact run in that direction (TURNER, L.J.).—DAVIS v. SHEPHERD (1866), 1 Ch. "the before-mentioned seams of coal": Held: the contract was sufficiently definite to enforce, & the true construction of it was, that the boundaries of the estate, which consisted of about twenty-seven acres, were to be thereafter defined.

(2) Pltf. had worked the coal under his estate, but abandoned it as unprofitable. Twenty years afterwards deft. cleared the pit & examined the coal in the shaft with other persons, & subsequently contracted for a lease. The colliery turned out to be worthless:—Held: deft. could not resist a specific performance, on the ground of pltf. not having communicated the fact of his having worked the mine & found it unprofitable.

A person contracting for the lease of a mine cannot resist its performance, on the ground of his ignorance of mining matters, & of the mine turning out worthless.

(3) In order to have entitled deft. to make time an element in this matter he ought to have given pltf. a formal notice that he repudiated the agreement, that he had abandoned the mine, & would have nothing more to do with the transaction (ROMILLY, M.R.).—HAYWOOD v. COPE (1858), 25 Beav. 140; 27 L. In Mar. 1850, deft. agreed to grant pltf. a lease of a coal mine. Three months after, deft. gave notice to pltf. that, unless he commenced working in a month, he should consider the agreement abandoned. Two years after, pltf. entered & commenced working, but was resisted by deft.; the working however proceeded, but was abandoned in Feb. 1853. Some dispute arose as to the terms of the agreement, & on Sept. 26, 1872, deft. gave pltf. notice that, unless he acquiesced in his views he should rescind the contract, & on Oct. 29 following, deft. stated his intention of abiding by that notice. On Nov. 4, 1872, pltf.'s solr. wrote to deft.'s solr. that he was instructed to file a bill for specific performance of the contract. The bill was not filed until Apr. 2, 1873:—Held: the effect of the notice of Sept. 1872, was to put the parties at arm's length, & pltf., if he intended to insist on his rights, ought to have proceeded at once; the delay in filing the bill was fatal to pltf.'s application for specific performance; the demurrer must be allowed.—HUXHAM v. LLEWELLYN (1873), 28 L. The result of this trial was not known to either party, but might have been ascertained on inquiry; & it further appeared that pltf. had no knowledge of the quality of the limestone. Deft. afterwards, & before signing the agreement, made a cursory inspection of the old quarry, & satisfied himself that the stone was limestone, but ascertained nothing as to its quality:—Held: the misrepresentation was a bar to a decree for specific performance.—HIGGINS v. SAMELS (1862), 2 John. & H. 460; 7 L. Pltf. then applied for leave to amend the declaration, by alleging that injury was before the assignment to him:—Held: (1) such amendment would have made the first breach bad; (2) if this were otherwise it could not be allowed, because no amendment ought to be allowed which would make the pleading so amended open to a demurrer; (3) the covenant to deliver up the works in repair ran with the interest of the owner of the fee expectant upon the determination of the term in the incorporeal right to enter & take the clay, & therefore pltf., the alienee of the land, could sue upon it.—MARTYN v. WILLIAMS (1857), 1 H. & N. 817; 26 L. 871. —— Profit à prendre.]—(1) G. & T., pltf.'s predecessors in title, having a general power of revocation & new appointment over lands of which they were respectively tenant for life in possession & tenant for life in remainder, by a deed of exchange in 1783 appointed & granted the lands to deft.'s predecessor in title in fee, saving & reserving nevertheless to G. & T., their heirs & assigns, full & free liberty to get the coal & minerals which should be found within the lands. The minerals were never worked under this reservation by pltf. or his predecessors in title. In 1865 the then owner of the lands demised the coal under part of them to persons whose interest became vested in defts. B. & B.; & in 1877 deft. H., who had succeeded to the ownership of the lands, demised the coal under another part to pltf. Some years after this pltf. first became aware of the reservation in the deed of 1783, & brought his action to establish his right to the minerals, to restrain defts. from working them, & to have the lease of 1877 rectified or set aside:—Held: the reservation in the deed of 1783 did not operate as an exception of the minerals, but only as a grant by defts.' predecessor in title of a right to work them; there was nothing to show this right was to be exclusive; & therefore it did not prevent the landowner from working them, provided he did not disturb the grantee in any working which the grantee was carrying on; & defts., therefore, had not infringed pltf.'s rights; the provision operated as a regrant of a licence.

(2) An exclusive licence to take the whole of a profit à prendre of a particular kind can be granted; but such a grant cannot be inferred from language which is not clear & explicit.

(3) A right to work mines is something more than a mere licence; it is a profit à prendre, an incorporeal hereditament lying in grant (LINDLEY, L.J.).

(4) What was reserved . . . was full & free liberty to work the mines under the lands conveyed by them. They reserved a profit à prendre, an incorporeal hereditament, not a mere personal revocable licence (LINDLEY, L.J.).—SUTHERLAND (DUKE) v. HEATHCOTE, [1892] 1 Ch. 475; 61 L. J. Ch. 248; 66 L. (2) This deed is most inartificially drawn. It appears to us, however, to operate as a lease of the mines. . . . Whether the deed, as to the subsequent right to get coals, is more than a covenant to grant for a subsequent term, is a question; but we think it operates as a grant of an easement, after the expiration of that lease, to win the remainder of the six acres paid for by the sum of £420; & whenever that quantity should be got, to win the remainder, paying £70 an acre. The lease for 12 years is good at common law; the limitation for the indefinite term afterwards, of the incorporeal hereditament only, which is to continue for an uncertain period, viz. till all the coals are got, would in a common law conveyance be either an estate for life . . . or an estate for years, & if so, it would be void for want of the certainty of years (PARKE, B.).—HAIGH v. JAGGAR (1847), 16 M. & W. 525; 17 L. A portion of the land being required by a railway co., B.'s claim for compensation in respect of his estate & interest in the land so required, & for deterioration to the residue, was referred to arbn. under the provisions of Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 18). The umpire found the interest of B. under the above agreement was that of merely a tenant from year to year; & he assessed the compensation upon that basis:—Held: the construction put by the umpire upon the agreement was correct; & evidence tending to show that by the custom of the brickmaking trade, brick land is never hired from year to year, was properly rejected.—Re STROUD (1849), 8 C. More than one seam of coal lay under the lands. The licencee after winning one seam went on to win another:—Held: the whole colliery was not won when the first seam was won, but the deed was to be read separatim as to the winning of each seam, & the licencee was entitled to reimburse himself the expenses of winning the second seam before any royalty was payable as to that seam.—ELLIOT v. ROKEBY (LORD) (1881), 7 App. Cas 43; 51 L. There were no express words giving a right to the exclusive occupation of the land; but the excavations & works contemplated by the agreement required a constant occupation of the land by A. until the coprolites were raised, & the land could not be used for any other purpose from the commencement of the excavations until it had been reinstated, which could not be done for a year or more after the coprolites were raised. B. reserved to himself the right of going upon the land where the excavations were for the purpose of inspecting the works, but he was not required by the agreement to do anything upon the lands:—Held: upon the construction of the whole agreement, A. had the right of exclusive occupation of the land.—ROADS v. TRUMPINGTON OVERSEERS (1870), L. By a deed dated Aug. 31, 1862, R. demised to B. all the coal mines & seams of coal, "& also all the mines, seams, veins, or beds of ironstone & fire-clay found in connection with such coal seams as are workable as coal seams," under the same lands as those to which C.'s licence applied, for the term of forty-two years from Nov. 22, 1858:—Held: (1) the words "coal seams workable as coal seams," must be construed, regard being had to all & every the powers conferred by the lease in which those words were found, & looking at those powers & at the evidence which, in the opinion of the ct. showed that the S. seam was workable at a profit when both the coal & the fire-clay were taken into account, that seam must be considered to be comprised in B.'s lease; (2) as C.'s licence was not an exclusive licence, the licencor had still a right to deal with the property comprised in that licence in any matter not inconsistent therewith.—CARR v. BENSON (1868), 3 Ch. 895. ——.]—By a lease dated in 1855, pltf. demised to two persons the right to drive a sough under his lands in Derbyshire, & to work the mines thereunder subject to the payment of certain royalties. The lessees were trustees for a mining co. The work was not begun till 1866 when the co. commenced mining under pltf.'s land, not, as they alleged, under the powers of the lease, but under the Derbyshire mining custom, which was that any man might search for & dig out lead ore in the land of any other man without making him any compensation. Pltf. demanded an account of the royalties due to him under the lease, alleging that his lands were exempt from this custom. The co. relied on their rights under the custom, & alleged that the lease had been executed without any authority from the then managing committee, & was therefore not binding on them:—Held: (1) pltf.'s lands were, according to the evidence, exempt from the custom; (2) the co. were bound by the lease; (3) pltf. was entitled to an account.

896. Distress—Not available.]—By deed made Sept. 4, 1843, B. granted to A. licence to get all the copperas stone which might be found in a certain part of the manor of M. for twenty-one years, at the yearly rent of £25 payable half yearly on June 24 & Dec. 25, with a proviso that if any part of the rent should be in arrear for twenty-one days, it should be lawful for B., his heirs & assigns, by notice in writing delivered to A., his exors., administrators or assigns, to determine the grant. On Jan. 31, 1856, J., who had become assignee of the licence, assigned the licence to defts. by way of mtge., & on Aug. 5, 1857, it was absolutely assigned to defts. by arrangement under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, who, by oral agreement granted to J. the enjoyment of all the rights under it on his paying the rent thereby reserved. On Mar. 27, 1858, pltf., who had purchased the manor in Aug. 1854, distrained goods of J., & H., his son, lying on the part of the manor mentioned in the licence, for arrears of rent due at Christmas, 1857. J. & H. thereupon brought actions against pltf. for the illegal distress, in which he suffered judgment by default; & in 1858, negotiations for a settlement of the actions & for granting a new licence to H. for a further term of twenty-one years, commencing on June 24, 1864, the day on which the grant of Sept. 4, 1843, would expire, were carried on between the attorneys of J. & of pltf., & it was verbally arranged between pltf.'s attorney & the attorney for J. & H. that the actions should be settled on certain terms, one of which was, that such a licence should be granted to H. These terms pltf. refused to carry out. On July 3, 1858, pltf. gave a written notice to defts. & J., pursuant to the proviso, to determine the licence. On Jan. 11, 1859, defts. tendered to pltf. £50 for two years rent due at Christmas, 1858, which pltf. refused to accept. In trespass for breaking & entering pltf.'s close & taking away copperas stone, the ct. having power on a special case to draw inferences of fact:—Held: (1) pltf., after the cause of forfeiture had occurred, sufficiently expressed & communicated to defts. his determination to treat the licence as existing, & was bound by that election, & therefore the subsequent notice was inoperative; (2) the tender of a sum which included rent accrued subsequently as well as prior to the cause of forfeiture, would not by itself amount to a waiver of the forfeiture. Qu.: whether, the distress being within six months after the cause of forfeiture, the period within which, by 8 Ann. c. 14, ss. 6, 7, a lessor may distrain after the determination of a lease, would by itself amount to an election to treat the licence as existing.

The declaration then contained an averment, that, at the time of the grant, & thence continually there were within the parcel of waste land so described in the grant, divers clay pits, etc., & certain leats necessary for washing & making merchantable said clay; that whilst said grant was in full force, & after

Part XIII.—Easements and Rights affecting Mines.

SECT. 1.—RIGHT OF SUPPORT.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

905. Acquisition by payment of compensation—Under private Act—Unworked minerals.]—By a local Act a co. were empowered to take lands for the purpose of their navigation, with provision for a jury to ascertain the sums to be paid as purchase-money & for damage in carrying the Act into effect. By sect. 170, it was provided that no mine owner should work any mine in or under any lands within 40 yards of certain tunnels, by which the canal passed under a hill, without the leave of the co.; & by sect. 171, if the co., instead of insisting upon having the full 40 yards left unworked, should require less than 30 yards to be left, then the mine owner might insist on having a greater quantity, not exceeding 30 yards, left unworked for his security; & the question in dispute as to such last mentioned quantity was to be tried, settled, & determined by an issue at law. Sect. 172 provided, that whenever any mine in due course should become workable within 40 yards of the tunnels, the mine owner should give notice to the co., who thereupon should pay him, as the case might be, for so much of the 40 yards as they should require to be left unworked for their security, or as might be ascertained by the issue to be necessary to be left unworked for his. Provided that no mines should in any case be worked under the tunnels; but whenever such last mentioned mines should become workable, satisfaction should be made by the co. for the same, such satisfaction to be settled by an issue at law. Sect. 178, gave the mode of trying any feigned issue, & enacted that, after trial & verdict, the ct. should give judgment for the sum of money awarded by the jury:—Held: where a mine had become workable within 40 yards of the tunnels, & the co. had required the whole 40 yards to be left unworked for their security the owner of the mine was entitled, under sect. 172, to compensation for the 40 yards, but the only remedy to enforce it was by a feigned issue, & not by an action on the case.—FENTON v. TRENT & MERSEY NAVIGATION CO. If it had appeared in the declaration in this case that the soil in which the mines were was deft.'s, or that deft. had all the right to get the mines which the owners of the adjoining soil had, the objection would have been fatal.

910. —— Whether extends to buildings erected since grant.]—By a deed of 1857, A., who was tenant for life under the will of one S., conveyed, under a power, land to B. in fee, with a reservation out of the grant of "all & every the seam or seams of coal & other minerals under the said hereditaments hereby granted, with power to win, work & carry away the same under or over any part of the said hereditaments & premises, the said A., or the person or persons for the time being entitled thereto, & his or their assigns, paying to the said B., his heirs & assigns, compensation for any damage which he or they may sustain thereby," & a covenant by A. that he had not done or permitted any act or thing whereby the premises or title thereto should or might be incumbered or prejudicially affected. B. covenanted, for himself, his heirs & assigns, "that the said hereditaments & premises hereby conveyed, or any buildings now or hereafter to be erected thereon, shall not at any time hereafter be used for the manufacture, sale, or storing of any combustible matter, or for the purpose of any offensive trade or business, the side walls not to be less than 18 feet high, & to be in uniformity with the street." In 1844, S., A.'s testator, had demised to C. & D. "a colliery & coal mines & seams of coal, as well opened as not opened, including & comprising all seams of coal under the land conveyed by the deed of 1857, with full power to the lessees, their exors. & administrators & assigns, to win, work & carry away the said seams of coal for a term of years not yet expired. Pltf. became possessed of the land comprised in the deed of 1857, & built four houses thereon; &, whilst he was so possessed, the houses were injured by the working & carrying away by the assignees under the lease of 1844 of the seams of coal thereunder. He thereupon brought an action against A., claiming compensation under the reservation contained in the deed of 1857. Deft., A., pleaded, seventhly, as to so much of the count as related to the damage & injury done to the part of the said piece of ground on which the said houses were built, & to the said houses, & to the compensation claimed by pltf. in respect thereof, that such damage & injury were occasioned by reason of the said houses having been erected thereon:—Held: the compensation clause in the deed of 1857 extended to houses thereafter built upon the land, & consequently the seventh plea was no answer to the declaration.—BERKLEY v. SHAFTO (1863), 15 C. B. N. S. 79; 143 E. R. 713.

911. —— —— Intention to build known to grantor.]—The general principle that a vendor who sells land for a particular purpose cannot derogate from his own grant by doing anything to prevent the land sold from being used for that purpose, applies to sales to railway cos. under compulsory powers. But this principle will not unnecessarily extend to compel a vendor, in the absence of any stipulation for the purpose, to perpetuate an accidental state of circumstances in his own land, though existing & of long standing at the date of the sale, & calculated to further the purpose for which the purchase was made.

A railway co. was empowered by its special Act to take lands, but the minerals were to be reserved to the vendors, who were to be at liberty to work them, causing no damage or obstructions to the Railway. By another clause it was provided that, on working up to within 20 yards of any masonry or building of the co., the owner of the minerals might require the co. to purchase the minerals within that range, or, on their neglect to do so, might work them in the usual & ordinary way, doing no avoidable damage. The co. purchased land from deft. under their compulsory powers.

Sect. 1.—Right of support: Sub-sect. 2, B.; sub-sect. 3, A. & B.]

At the time of the purchase there was, beneath the land purchased & a large tract of the adjoining land of the vendor, an old mine which had been drowned for more than forty years. The water stood 80 fathoms deep in the shaft, which was at a considerable distance from the purchased land, & vertical support was given to the surface of the purchased land chiefly by pillars left in the mine & partly by the hydrostatic pressure of the water in the shaft. The removal of the water from the levels of the mine was said to be likely to weaken the pillars. The co. took the land for the purpose of erecting a bridge of great weight, which was accordingly built. More than twenty years after the completion of the bridge, deft. a subsequent lessee of the vendor, threatened to drain the shaft & renew the working of the mine:—Held: (1) deft. would be liable for damage to the railway, although caused by proper & workmanlike operations, except as to workings carried on within 20 yards of buildings, after satisfying the conditions of the Act; (2) deft. was entitled to drain the shaft, & was not liable for any damage to the bridge which might be caused by the withdrawal of the hydrostatic pressure; (3) notwithstanding any right of property in the water under the land acquired by the co., the right to take the minerals carried with it the right to remove the water for that purpose; but deft., except so far as he might be saved within the 20 yards aforesaid by the provisions of the Act, was answerable for any damage caused by such withdrawal, or otherwise by his workings in any other way than by the withdrawal of the hydrostatic pressure of the water.—NORTH EASTERN RY. A. sold land to B. for the purpose of an iron foundry. Adjoining the land so sold to B., A. had other land under which was coal. A. afterwards leased the minerals to C. who commenced working the coal within such a distance from the land of B. as to be reasonably calculated to endanger its stability:—Held: ground for an injunction against A. & C. although no actual damage had been sustained by B.

Such an injunction will be granted although the minerals have not actually begun to be worked, if an intention has been expressed of working them, & preparations for so doing commenced.

The owner, who had sold the land to the co. reserving mines, gave notice to the railway co. of his intention to work the clay, & the co. did not purchase it:—Held: the owner was entitled to work the clay from the surface, & for that purpose to enter upon the land conveyed by him to the co., & to remove the ballast & surface soil lying above such clay.

According to the ordinary theories of law, a person who grants to an individual or to a corporate body land for the purpose of making upon the land some work like a railway, a canal, or other buildings, impliedly is taken, unless there is any provision to the contrary contained in the document which describes the rights, to grant also that necessary support which both parties must be supposed to have known would be required, & without which his grant would become ineffectual & futile (BOWEN, L.J.).—RUABON BRICK & TERRA COTTA CO. v. GREAT WESTERN RY. 915. —— —— After minerals worked out.]— In 1864, comrs. conveyed to the pltf.'s predecessors in title two farms, in fee simple, subject to the reservation of minerals, with the following proviso, for compensation: "Provided always that the said Ecclesiastical Comrs. their successors assigns, & lessees . . . shall pay to the said William Watson his heirs & assigns reasonable compensation for the use & occupation of any part of the said land or for the severance of same or for the spoil of ground or damage to the buildings on or to the surface of the land or ground the reversion of which is intended to be hereby conveyed which shall be taken done or occasioned by the exercise of the powers hereby excepted, & reserved." In 1899, the comrs. granted to defts. a lease of the mines underneath lands which included the two farms the subject of the conveyance of 1864 :—Held : on the construction of the proviso for compensation, the word "buildings" was not limited to buildings in existence at the date of the conveyance, & pltf. was entitled to recover from defts. compensation for injury caused by the subsidence of the surface to buildings erected after the underlying coal had been worked out, but in ignorance of that fact.—AYNSLEY v. BEDLINGTON COAL CO., LTD. SUB-SECT. 3.—EXCLUSION OF RIGHT.

A. In General.

916. Express words or necessary implication essential.]—(1) A lessor demised for sixty years, at certain rents & royalties, the following parcels, viz., firstly & secondly, certain cottages, engine house, etc. : thirdly, all the mines, etc., which then were or thereafter during the said term might be discovered within all the lands, about 514 acres, described in the map : & also full liberty, etc. for the lessees, etc., to dig, etc., & carry & sell, etc., all iron coal, etc., in, from, over, upon, or under the said lands, & to open, dig, etc., any pits, levels, etc., into, upon, about, or under the said mines & lands, except in, or upon the demesne lands coloured red in the plan, being a piece of 4 acres on which a capital mansion house & buildings were erected :—Held : this was a demise of the whole mines under the whole 514 acres, but with a restricted right of enjoyment in the lessees, so that the lessor could not demise the red part to any other persons, but the lessees had no right to work the mines under the red.

Upon the terms of the indenture it is clear that the mines & minerals under the lands coloured red were included in & did pass by the lease ; but that defts. were not authorised by that indenture to work them (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).

(2) By the common law, where A. has two interests in the same hereditament, as houses or minerals, or a water course & also a mill, or two stories in a house, & demises one part, e.g. the lower portion of a house, reserving to himself the upper part, the grantee either for years or in fee will not, except by express stipulation or very direct implication, be permitted to use the portion held by him so as to interfere with the enjoyment by the grantor of the portion which he has retained possession of.—DUGDALE v. ROBERTSON (1857), 3 K. & J. 695 ; 30 L. 928. Covenant excepting liability in respect of newly built houses—Application to mine owners holding under antecedent lease.]—In 1840, a bed of coal, called the High Hazle Bed, was demised, with working powers, to persons from whom defts. took by assignment. The lessees were to pay a minimum rent of £200 as for 2 acres 1 rood 16 poles, & a further yearly rent at the rate of £85 per acre for coal actually got beyond the 2 acres 1 rood 16 poles, "including all ribs & pillars left in working the said coal except the pillars for the support of the shafts, the pillars between the deep & counter level, the pillars all round the estate, & the pillars under the homestead & farm buildings." These pillars of specified dimensions, the lessees bound themselves to leave "during the whole of the term," & they also covenanted to work the mines "according to the best of their judgment, skill, & discretion, in a good & workmanlike manner." In 1857 the assignee of the lessor conveyed part of the land within which the mine lay to persons from whom pltfs. took with notice, reserving to the grantor the High Hazle Bed, except a small portion specified, & "the mines, veins, & bed of coal, fire-clay, & other clay, stone & other minerals lying under the said bed called the High Hazle Bed," with powers to the grantor, his heirs & assigns, & his & their tenants & lessees, to be exercised "from & after the expiration of the term" for "carrying on the works of the mine, & getting & carrying away the said fire-clay, etc." so reserved; & also reserving to the grantor the coal rent under the lease of 1840, with the necessary powers. Provision was made for rent for land used or occupied by the grantor for the purposes of the mine, & for compensation for buildings required or removed for that purpose, & for surface damage to the land; but it was specially provided that the grantor, his heirs or assigns, tenants, or lessees, should not be liable for any damage caused to buildings which should thereafter be erected on the land conveyed, by the sinking of the land through mining operations in getting the "coal, clay, stone, & other minerals hereby excepted & removed." The pillars specified in the lease of 1840 were left; & defts. worked according to the usual course of mining in the district; but their workings caused a subsidence which injured the land of pltfs. & buildings erected since 1857. The land would have subsided without the buildings:—Held: it appearing by the lease of 1840 to be the intention of the parties that all the coal should be removed, except the specified pillars, & defts. having worked the mine in a proper manner, they were not liable for the injury.—EADON v. JEFFCOCK (1872), L. B. had land adjoining to W., & began to work his own mines in such a manner as he would have done if intending to carry the workings below W.'s lands, & by reason of such working on B.'s own lands the buildings on W.'s land cracked & suffered injury:—Held: the reservation did not protect B. from liability, for it referred only to damage caused by working mines

Pltf. brought an action for an injunction against the landowner & the co.:—Held: the proviso in the lease was unintelligible & could not determine the rights of the parties: if a lessor wished to reserve rights in derogation of his grant, he must do so in plain terms: & on that ground pltf. was entitled to an injunction if he could prove that the works threatened by defts. would in all probability affect the security of his mine. 933. —— ——.]—The state of the law is now perfectly clear. The mere fact of giving a right to sink pits, & to work or get out coal, does not of itself establish a right to get rid of that which is a common law right of the surface owner, to have his surface undisturbed. . . . It appears to me that the law upon the question must now be regarded as settled, &, there being no express permission, the onus lies on the person who says he has a right to do it to show something in the instrument which gives him that right (LORD HALSBURY, C.).

Speaking for myself, I cannot see why a covenant providing a particular measure or mode of obtaining compensation is in any way inconsistent with the existence of an obligation not to let down the surface, even though that covenant extends beyond the surface, & is applicable also, or even exclusively, I should say, to underground operations (LORD DAVEY).—NEW SHARLSTON COLLIERIES CO., LTD. v. WESTMORLAND (EARL) (1900), [1904] 2 Ch. 443, n.; 73 L. 934. —— —— Though in widest terms.]—Before 1757 the lord of a manor had the right to work mines & minerals under the waste lands of the manor so as to let down the surface, provided enough pasturage was left to satisfy the rights of the commoners. By an inclosure Act of 1757 the waste lands were enclosed & allotted, & the lord of the manor was empowered to work the mines & minerals under the allotments as fully & freely as he might have done if the Act had not passed, & that without making or paying any satisfaction for so doing. A compensation clause in the Act provided that any damage done to an allottee by the exercise of the powers reserved to the lord should be paid for by an assessment upon the occupiers of the other allotments:—Held: upon the true construction of the Act, the common law right of the surface owners to the support of the surface was not taken away by express words or necessary implication.

The surface owner is entitled of common right to support for his property in its natural position & in its natural condition without interference or disturbance by or in consequence of mining operations, unless such interference or disturbance is authorised by the instrument of severance either in express terms or by necessary implication (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

If the compensation clause is capable of being satisfied by reference to acts done on the surface, then, though it may be wide enough to cover also damage done to the surface by taking away the support, still it must be confined to damage done on the surface, & the inference that support may be taken away on payment of compensation will not be drawn (LORD LOREBURN).

To exclude the presumption it is not enough that mining rights have been reserved or granted in the largest terms imaginable, or that powers & privileges usually found in mining grants are conferred without stint, or that compensation is provided in measure adequate or more than adequate to cover any damage likely to be occasioned by the exercise of those powers & privileges. Nor is it enough, in the case of a lease, that the lessee is bound to work out the minerals or to work the minerals in a prescribed manner, or, in the case of an inclosure Act or award, that the lord in whose favour the mines are reserved or regranted may be authorised to work the minerals & enjoy the property as fully & freely as if the inclosure Act had not been passed (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

The absence of any provision for compensation is some indication that the ordinary rights of the surface owner were intended to be left untouched. On the other hand, the presence of a provision for compensation, which is obviously inadequate or plainly inappropriate if applied to damage by subsidence, is cogent evidence to prove that subsidence was not contemplated (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

If there is no provision for giving compensation for the injury done to the surface, it is almost conclusive that the common law rule was intended to apply. But it is not so clear that if there be a provision giving such compensation it is sufficient to exclude the common law rule (LORD DAVEY).—BUTTERKNOWLE COLLIERY CO. v. BISHOP AUCKLAND INDUSTRIAL CO-OPERATIVE CO., [1906] A. & every part thereof, & to sell & dispose of, take, & convey away the same, at their free will & pleasure; & also to sink shafts, etc., for the raising up works, carrying away & disposing of the same or any part thereof, making a fair compensation to P. for the damage to be done to the surface of the premises, & the pasture & crops growing thereon:—Held: under this reservation, A. was not entitled to take all the mines, but only so much as he could get leaving a reasonable support to the surface.

(2) It appears that J. was entitled both to the mines & the land above, & that he granted away the land above, excepting out of the grant the mines, which would otherwise have passed under the conveyance of the land (ALDERSON, B.).

(3) It becomes unnecessary to inquire whether or not he was bound to leave support for an additional superincumbent weight upon the surface; probably he would not be (LORD ABINGER, C.B.).

(4) As to the compensation clause: it seems to me, upon the true construction of the covenant, that the provision applies only to the exercise of rights upon the surface; but supposing that it were otherwise, & it applied to any injury of this sort done by getting the minerals below in an improper manner, not authorised by the power, all that can be said to it is, that it only gives an action of covenant by the covenantee against the covenantor, as well as any other remedy he might have for the acting in that respect without being authorised so to do by the power. It is a cumulative remedy (LORD ABINGER, C.B.).

(5) The mines being under pltf.'s soil are only his property primâ facie (PARKE, B.).

(6) What is then the meaning & intention of the parties here? 946. —— ——.]—If the owner of a piece of land sells the surface & reserves the minerals below it, with power to get them, he must, if he intends to have the power of destroying or letting down the surface by subsidence in getting them, frame his power by such language that the Court may be able to say from the titles that such was clearly the intention of the parties. A. was the owner of 500 acres of land. He, in 1800, feued the whole coal, etc., therein to B. with full power to work & win same, & for that purpose to set down pits, etc., but expressly providing that B. should not be at liberty to sink pits, or break the surface of the land lying on the north of a certain line: with full power, however, to work the coal there, provided it was done from pits situate on the south of the line, without breaking the surface of the land on the north; but for the "whole damage & injury occasioned by the foresaid operations" A. & his successors "shall be completely paid & indemnified by" B. In 1801 A., by disposition & sale, conveyed to C.'s predecessor all his right & title in a parcel of land situate on the north of the line, reserving to himself & his feuars the liberty to take the coal, substantially in the terms given above, & providing that the persons carrying on these operations were to be liable to C.'s predecessor "for the whole damage thereby occasioned:" declaring that the rules contained in the above feu right should be the rule of settlement between C.'s predecessor & B. In 1799 A. had feued to another predecessor of C. a parcel of land contiguous to the above & also to the north of the line, under reservation of the minerals, & with liberty to work same "so as not to break the surface of the said lands or injure the springs therein upon payment to" C.'s predecessors "any damage that may be occasioned to the said lands by the working of the minerals." B. claimed an absolute right to work out the whole of the coal, under the obligation to pay C. a money compensation for any damage done to the surface:—Held: (1) there was nothing in the titles of the parties which had the effect of taking away or derogating from the common law right of the owner of the surface to insist that the owner of the minerals shall leave sufficient supports to sustain the surface uninjured; & (2) the provision as to payment of compensation for damage done by accident or negligence.—DIXON v. WHITE (1883), 8 App. Cas. 833, H. 947. —— ——.]—An inclosure Act enacted that allotments should be made to the persons having a right of common upon the waste of the manor, that is, to the owners of every separate ancient dwelling-house within the manor; that all right of common should be extinguished; & that the allotments should be held & enjoyed by the allottees by the same tenure & estates as the respective dwelling-houses; provided that nothing should prejudice, lessen, or defeat the title & interest of the lords of the manor to & in the royalties, but that the lords & their successors as owners of the royalties should for ever hold & enjoy all "rents, courts, perquisites, profits, mines, power of using or granting wayleave, waifs, estrays, & all other royalties & jurisdictions whatsoever" to the owners of the manor appertaining "in as full, ample, & beneficial manner to all intents & purposes as they could or might have held & enjoyed same in case this Act had not been made." Provided further, that in case the lords or any persons claiming under them should work any mines lying under any allotment, or should lay, make, or use any way or ways over any allotment, such persons so working the mines, or laying, making, or using such way or ways should make "satisfaction for the damages & spoil of ground occasioned thereby to the person or persons who shall be in possession of such ground at the time or times of such damage or spoil"; such satisfaction to be settled by arbn. & "not to exceed the sum of £5 yearly during the time of working such mines or continuing or using such way or ways for every acre of ground so damaged or spoiled."

At the time of passing the Act there were no customs which enlarged or cut down the common law rights of the lords to work the minerals under the wastes of the manor. Under the Act an allotment was made in 1772 to a commoner in respect of an ancient freehold dwelling-house. At that time no house had been built upon the allotment. More than twenty years after a house had been built upon it, the minerals underlying it were worked by lessees of the lords of the manor so as to cause the surface of the land to subside, whereby the house was damaged to an amount exceeding the sum recoverable under the proviso. The land would have subsided if there had been no house. An action for damages having been brought against the lessees by the allottee's successor in title & by his tenant in possession :—Held : upon the true construction of the Act, the proviso for satisfaction did not apply to damage from subsidence ; there was nothing in the Act giving the lords the right to let down the surface ; pltfs. were entitled to have the house & land supported by the minerals, & to recover damages for the subsidence.

It appears to me that here the principles already mentioned throw, at all events as strongly as before, upon applts., the duty of showing that there are words which dispense, in their favour, with the general rule of law, & give them a right to let down the surface & deprive the surface owner of his ordinary right of support (LORD SELBORNE).

I think it must always be presumed that a clause providing compensation was intended to cover the damage resulting to the landowner from the exercise of the powers previously reserved or granted to the owner of the mines. It is not the proper office, nor is it presumable the intention of such a clause, to define or extend the powers given to the mine owner ; & it is frequently ob majorem cautelam, & in the interest of the landowner, expressed in comprehensive terms, so as to include every species of damage which may result from operations which are consistent with giving support to the surface. The clause may, nevertheless, be so expressed as to explain the character & extent of these powers, as was the case in Aspden v. Seddon, No. 798, ante, where the power reserved to the mine owner was to work the subjacent minerals without entering upon the surface of the lands. That power would not, of itself, have warranted letting down the surface ; but it was made subject to the condition that the person working the mines should pay for all damages to erections on the surface occasioned by the exercise of the reserved power. Entry on the land being prohibited, it was a reasonable, if not a necessary, inference in that case, that the kind of underground working, contemplated & sanctioned, was such as would cause subsidence & injure buildings erected on the surface. But any such inference derived from the terms in which compensation is provided, must, in my opinion, be plain & unequivocal : otherwise general words, which were only meant to include every possible injury that could be caused by working without disturbance of the surface, might be construed as a power to let it down (LORD WATSON).—LOVE v. BELL (1884), 9 App. Cas. 286 ; 53 L. Where, however, the deed which granted the surface reserving the minerals, contained only the provision that the grantor should have the collieries & coal mines, veins & seams of coal, together with free & full power & liberty at all times to work, sink, dig for or win the same, & to drive drift or drifts, make watercourses, or do any other act necessary, needful or convenient for the working, winning, obtaining or getting the same, paying to the grantee treble damages for loss or damage sustained by reason of the working of the mines :—Held : (1) the terms of this reservation did not authorise the grantor to work the mines in such manner as to leave the surface without support ; (2) the entire removal of all the coal, so as to deprive the surface of support, was not an act necessary for the working & winning of the mines ; (3) upon the evidence, it was contrary to the approved practice of mining in the county of Durham at the date of the reservation, 1671, to leave the surface without support ; & a plea which alleged that defts. had done the acts complained of in accordance with the approved practice of mining, must be taken to refer to the practice at the date of the reservation.

It may be contended that the powers here reserved of working & winning the coals are not confined to such as are to be exercised on the surface; but, wherever exercised, they are perfectly consistent with the exercise of them being subject to the implied right of the owner of the surface to support from the minerals. . . . The right to compensation may well be contemplated as extending only to injuries which may arise from mining, the mining being carried on in such a manner as that the surface is still left to enjoy a sufficient support (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.). —SMART v. MORTON (1855), 5 E. & B. 30; 3 C. 954. —— —— ——.]—A clause in a mining lease that the lessee may work the mines "in the usual & most approved way in which same is performed in other works of the like kind in the county," refers simply to the mode of carrying on the underground works for mining purposes; but does not suppose a custom to work the mines so as to injure or interfere with the rights of other people. Nor did the words that the mining lessee should have liberty to enter upon the land & carry away the minerals, & to erect buildings, & "do and execute all such other acts, works, & things upon, in, or under, or above, the said premises, as shall be necessary or convenient for working & carrying away same, making compensation," etc., enlarge the power so to deal with the mines as to let down the surface.

It is quite true that where parties have agreed in this way, you shall make compensation for whatever injury you do in respect of these rights, & amongst other things you shall make compensation for what you do in letting down the surface, the conclusion is very strong from that, that the lessor says, You may let down the surface. I do not say that it is conclusive, but it is a very strong argument, if you find that clause, to say that he did mean that the lessee might let down the surface (LORD BLACKBURN).

It is impossible that those words "the usual & most approved way of working in the county of Glamorgan" can have been intended to absolve the lessee from a legal obligation. . . . They relate simply to the manner of working the mine for mining purposes; they have no reference to the rights of other persons, which there could not possibly be any local custom in such a district as a county to disregard, & which must be respected in carrying on those works (LORD SELBORNE, C.). —DAVIS v. TREHARNE (1881), 6 App. Cas. 460; 50 L. 957. —— Compensation adequate—Damage to building & crops.]—Pltf. declared for injury caused to his land by defts. wrongfully & negligently excavating & working certain mines under & adjacent to the said land, & thereby the land gave way & sank, & a certain mill, cottage, & other buildings became prostrate & ruinous, & a stream of water was diverted from pltf.'s land. The pleas demurred to were based upon an indenture of lease made before pltf. became possessed of the land as alleged, by which the owners in fee demised & leased unto certain lessees, whose interest afterwards vested in defts., for thirty-eight years from Mar. 25, 1839, & all manner of veins & seams of coal, ironstone, & other stone & minerals of any manner or sort whatsoever that should or might be found or discovered in or under the said land, with full power, liberty, & authority to get the coal, ironstone, & other stone, & other minerals out of all pits already sunk or open, & the like liberty & authority to bore, dig, delve, & sink as many other pits as the lessees might think necessary. The lessees were to make reasonable satisfaction to the said owners in fee, their heirs & assigns, & their tenants, for the damage done to them respectively by the surface of their land being covered with rubbish or otherwise injured, or as they might sustain as well by the injury done to the lands of the said owners in fee in sinking & getting the said mines & minerals, & converting coal into charcoal, as for such damage or injury as might be done or caused in the dwelling-houses or other buildings of the said owners by so doing. The lessees covenanted at their own costs & charges in case of damage or injury to such buildings to rebuild or repair same; & also over & besides the immediate damage to stock or crops so damaged to pay a satisfaction for all damages & trespasses sustained by the owners in fee after the rate of 40*s. per annum* for five years from the commencement of the damage, & after that time to pay such a price for the land so damaged as should be settled by arbitration. Upon the payment by the lessees of the price so settled, they were to have the free use & possession of the damaged land for the residue of the term demised. Defts. averred that the damage alleged in the declaration was done by them in working their mines in pursuance of their lease, & they were always willing to settle the compensation in accordance with the covenants thereof. Besides demurring to these pleas on the ground that the said indenture of lease did not expressly or impliedly deprive pltf. of the right to have his land supported, & that the covenants set out merely gave a cumulative remedy; pltf. also replied that the buildings damaged had been erected since the making of the said lease:—Held: (1) by this indenture of lease the owners in fee granted the absolute right to the minerals; & (2) pltf.'s remedy for the loss of the support of his land & buildings was restricted to that provided by the covenants in the lease.—SMITH v. DARBY (1872), L. 966. —— —— Effect of subsequent incorporation of Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20).]—A local Act in 1829 provided that a landowner in conveying his land to the co. might reserve the mines, but he should not be able to work those under the railway without finding security for any damage that might result. B., on conveying his lands reserved the mines. Afterwards the W. ry. co. obtained an Act converting their line which was originally intended to be a tramroad into a line for locomotives, & it was afterwards amalgamated with the C. line the Act for which incorporated above Act:—Held: B. could not, under above Act, insist on working the mines so as to endanger the railway until the co. purchased them, for his conveyance impliedly covenanted that the surface should have sufficient subjacent & adjacent support, & the general Act did not apply to cases where the land had been regulated by a prior contract.—CALEDONIAN RY. 967. General rule—Not until damage suffered.]—The owner of the mines might have removed every atom of the minerals without being liable to an action if the soil above had not fallen. So, if the superincumbent strata rested on the minerals he might have abstracted them, & substituted stone, or brick or any other substance, & would not have incurred any liability if the surface had not sunk (CRESSWELL, J.).—ROWBOTHAM v. WILSON (1857), 8 E. & B. 123; 27 L. (b) Who may Sue and be Sued.

968. Who may sue—Local authority.]—A local authority may act as relators in an action brought by the A.-G. for the purpose of abating a public nuisance, & may themselves maintain an action for damages for a nuisance affecting property of which they are the actual owners.

The proposition contended for is that because a local board is a corpn. existing for statutory purposes it has not the ordinary proprietary rights in respect of property which belongs to it. That is a very novel proposition & it has been candidly admitted that, if it is well founded, to put an extreme case, the corpn. of Liverpool, who are the owners of St. George's Hall, would have no right of action against a private person who, in working his coal mine, undermined the hall & let it down & destroyed it. But in such a case the corpn. have, as it seems to me, the ordinary common law rights attached to the possession of real property (WILLS, J.).—A.-G. v. LOGAN, [1891] 2 Q. B. 100; 65 L. (2) A lessee of underground strata is not liable in damages to the owner of buildings on the surface, who has acquired a right to have the buildings uninjured by underground workings, for injury occasioned to the buildings by reason of subsidence happening during the currency of the lease, caused, not by any act of commission on the part of the lessee, but resulting from an excavation made in the underground strata by the lessee's predecessor in title prior to the date of the lease. Therefore, where pltfs.' buildings, erected more than twenty years before action, on land, the mines under which were worked by defts. under a lease, were injured, during the currency of the lease, & within six years before action, by subsidence caused, not by the acts of defts., but by the acts of their predecessor in title, done prior to the date of the lease:—Held: defts. were not liable.—GREENWELL v. LOW BEECHBURN COAL CO., [1897] 2 Q. 975. What damages recoverable—Ordinary use of land to be considered.]—A conveyance of land in fee was made subject to a reservation to the grantors of mines & minerals, & extensive powers of occupying & using the surface for the purpose of working same. It was provided thereby that it should not be lawful for the grantee to do or suffer anything to be done whereby the grantors should be prevented, hindered, or obstructed in the exercise of the powers reserved, & also that the grantors should make to the grantee annually reasonable compensation for damage or spoil of ground to be occasioned by the exercise of the reserved powers. Previously to the date of the deed of conveyance the premises were leased to the grantee, subject to similar reservations to those in the conveyance, & workings already existed which had taken place under such reservations:—Held: (1) no restriction was placed by the words of the conveyance on the use by the grantee of the land for any purpose to which it was applicable so long as he did not touch or interfere with the minerals, & the compensation for damage or spoil of ground occasioned by the exercise of the powers reserved must be estimated with reference to the value of the land for any purpose to which an ordinary owner might put it; & (2) compensation was due in respect of

977. Costs of inquiry as to damages—Whether included in costs of action—Compromise.]—Pltfs. brought two actions against defts. to recover damages caused by the subsidence of land of which they were owners in fee by reason of the working by defts. of their mines lateral & vertical to pltfs.' lands. By consent, an order was made in both actions directing an inquiry before an official referee as to damages in each action, the costs of such inquiries to be in the discretion of the official referee. A large sum in costs was incurred by pltfs. in respect to the inquiries under two orders by the official referee, but subsequently a compromise was arranged, & an agreement was executed by the parties in 1914 under which all proceedings in the two actions were stayed & defts. agreed to pay pltfs.' costs of the actions:—Held: under the circumstances pltfs.' costs of the actions included their costs of the inquiries so far as they had proceeded.—STOKE-UPON-TRENT CORPN. v. STAFFORDSHIRE COAL & IRON CO. 982. —— When subsidence caused—Though no substantial damage proved.]—In the year 1865 Lady W., pltf.'s predecessor in title, sold & conveyed to J. C. & Sons, Ltd., at the price of £26,500, all the mines, veins, & seams of coal, iron, & other ores under certain hereditaments known as the S. estate, containing 1,178 acres or thereabouts, together with full power to make, sink, & work all such pits, shafts, drifts, levels, & do all such other acts as might be deemed necessary or convenient for working, searching for, getting & raising the same & to do all other works & things which might be necessary or convenient for the purposes aforesaid, or any of them, doing as little damage as might be consistent with the due & proper carrying out of the said works. The deed contained a covenant by the co. not to sink any shaft or drive any level which should or might weaken or damage any building on the vendor's lands, & to make satisfaction to be assessed as therein mentioned for the spoil, or damage, or injury done to, in, & upon the said lands by the machinery for getting & raising the said coal, or by the sinking or working of any pit or shaft, or otherwise by virtue of or under the powers aforesaid. Defts. in this action were lessees of J. C. & Sons, Ltd. They were working on the long-wall system some of the deeper seams of coal under the S. estate, & had caused some subsidence of the surface in places, but no substantial damage was proved. Pltf. brought this action for an injunction to restrain defts. from working the coal so as to cause subsidence of the surface. Defts. claimed a right to cause subsidence as long as they worked in a proper method. There was a conflict of evidence whether it was possible to work the coal at all without causing subsidence, but it was in effect admitted that it was not possible to do so at a profit:—Held: the grant of the minerals did not expressly or by necessary implication give power to let down the surface, & pltf. was entitled to the injunction.—NEW SHARLSTON COLLIERIES CO., LTD. v. WESTMORLAND (EARL) (1900), [1904] 2 Ch. 443, n.; 73 L. When interim injunction will be granted—Not when merely risk of irreparable damage.]—An injunction to restrain the working of valuable mines refused, under the circumstances, on condition of deft.'s making certain admissions for the purpose of enabling pltf. to bring an action, although there was reason to apprehend that if the working was continued, pltf.'s houses upon the surface would be totally destroyed or irreparably damaged before the legal right could be decided.

(c) Inspection.

990. Power of court to order — Inspection of workings.]—The ct. will order the lessees of a colliery, who have worked the coal pits demised to them by means of a shaft made on their own adjoining land, to permit inspection & access to the colliery demised by having access to it through & over the lessees' own land, to ascertain the extent, condition, & state of such colliery.

In cases where orders of this kind have been made, they have been made on the ground of "necessity"; that, without some such inspection pltf. was wholly unable to prove his case. There was an allegation in the present case also as to the working for coal under the buildings, which had caused them to crack & sink, & that, therefore, there was now no adequate support; now the moment inadequate support commenced, irreparable damage forthwith followed, which rendered this also a case of irreparable damage; this was to some extent admitted by the answer, & against which damage pltf. had a right to be protected by an injunction, when such irreparable damage was made to appear. In similar cases the ct. had allowed inspection to be made before the hearing of the cause (WIGRAM, V.-C.).—LEWIS v. MARSH (1849), 8 Hare, 97; 13 L. T. O. S. 89; 68 E. R. 288.

The heirs of the feoffor having for a valuable consideration conveyed to a purchaser in fee the manor of F. & its demesne lands, with its appurtenances, & all the coal mines under, amongst others, the lands in question, etc.:—Held: the coals were, by the exception, reserved to the feoffor in fee, & therefore they passed to the purchaser; &, also, the latter was entitled, under the express liberty reserved, to enter upon the land, to dig pits, & get the coals, so long as he remained owner of the demesne lands:—Semble: the express liberty is not restrictive of that which would be implied by law to get the coals, & the purchaser would be entitled to an incidental right to get them co-extensive with his estate.

necessary, no attendance upon the land of unnecessary persons. It would be questionable at least, whether it would authorise a deposit upon the land for the purposes of sale, & whether it would justify the introduction of purchasers to view the coals. The express power gives great latitude in these respects. . . . It has therefore its necessary use . . . though it work nothing in restraint of the incidental right which A. & his heirs would otherwise have had (BAYLEY, J.).—CARDIGAN (EARL) v. ARMITAGE (1823), 2 B. & C. 197; 3 Dow. & Ry. (2) The galee, who is the grantor in the reservation, has no other estate or interest under his gale than the right of getting the seams of coal which are granted to him; & after he has gotten the coal has interest ceases, & the space occupied by the coal that has been won is vested in the Crown who remains owner of all that is not granted (LORD WESTBURY, C.).

(3) Where there is a general reservation or exception the right or powers complied in such reservation or exception shall not be restrained or abridged by affirmative words expressive of part of that which is implied, because a general power which is incident or implied shall not be restrained by a particular power given by the grantor in the affirmative, which the grantee had before. In such a case the maxim "expressum facit cessare tacitum" does not apply, & the words giving the special power shall not restrain the general power, because they are in the affirmative only (LORD WESTBURY, C.).—GOOLD v. GREAT WESTERN DEEP COAL CO., GREAT WESTERN DEEP COAL CO. v. GOOLD (1865), 2 De G. 995. —— —— ——.] — Where a railway co. purchase under their statutory powers some of the underlying minerals as well as the surface of land, the rights & obligations which arise from the purchase as between the co. & the owner of the remaining minerals, are determined by Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 33), ss. 77–85, not by the common law.

At common law, where, by agreement, the upper portion of land is sold, the mines being reserved, without any express stipulation, I think a necessary implication arises in favour of the mine owner, that, if he cannot get the coal otherwise, he may, working in a reasonable way, bore through the upper land which is sold to get at the mine. Under the statute, where the upper portion of the land is taken compulsorily, leaving the mine, I think the implication must be the same (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—Re GERARD (LORD) & LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. 996. —— —— Permanent destruction of surface.]—39 Geo. 3, c. 21, which enabled ecclesiastical corpns. to sell lands for the redemption of the land tax, provided in sect. 12 that no minerals belonging to any lands sold by such corpn. should pass in any conveyance of such lands either by express or general words, but should be always absolutely excepted & reserved as fully as if expressly excepted in the conveyance. Land Tax Redemption Act, 1817 (c. 100), contained enactments confirming invalid sales under the first Act. In the interval between the two Acts a prebendary sold lands, reserving in the conveyance the pipe & potter's clay thereunder to the prebendary for the time being, except within 20 perches from the houses & inclosures forming part of the lands sold:—Held: the subsequent confirming enactments of Land Tax Redemption Act, 1817 (c. 100), s. 25, did not so ratify the conveyance as to give validity to the exception from the reservations, but all the clay under the lands conveyed was reserved to the prebendary & his successors in title, & they had the powers of working the same incident to the reservation thereof under the first-mentioned Act.

There will be a declaration that defts. are not entitled to work or get the clay so as to destroy, injure or let down the surface of the lands comprised in the indenture (HALL, V.-C.).—WHIDBORNE v. ECCLESIASTICAL COMRS. FOR ENGLAND (1877), 7 Ch. D. 375; 47 L. J. Ch. 129; 37 L. T. 346.

1003. Ancillary rights—Provision of repair pits for sough.]—A. & B. being severally seised of parcels of woody ground, & B. having other lands adjoining to his woody ground, & intending to make a colliery under his ground, A. grants to B. his heirs & assigns, liberty for him, his heirs & assigns, to carry up a sough or drain through A.'s woody ground into B.'s woody ground, & also liberty for B. his heirs & assigns, to make two little sough pits in A.'s woody ground, for the more easy & safe carrying up the tail of the sough, one of which was to be covered in as soon as conveniently might be after making the sough, & the other to be kept open for examining the sough so long as was necessary for that purpose, & no longer: & B. covenanted that he, his heirs & assigns, would not damage the trees growing on A.'s woody ground, nor get any of the coals under it, except what should arise in the drift of the intended sough, & that A., his heirs & assigns, from time to time & at all times after might go down into any pit or pits of B., his heirs or assigns, to discover whether any coals of A., his heirs or assigns, should be gotten; & that B., his heirs & assigns, should repair any injury to A.'s fence, etc.:—Held: by the grant to B., his heirs, etc., of the liberty of making the sough in A.'s land the liberty of making sought pits at any time afterwards, while the object of the grant remained, being necessary for the purpose of repairing the sough, passed as incident thereto: & the use of such sough, for the carrying up of which into B.'s woody ground liberty was granted, was not confined to the getting of coals under B.'s woody ground, but extended also to the adjoining lands of B.: & the liberty of making new sough pits for necessary repairs of the sough, after the two original sough pits had been covered in by mutual consent, was not controlled by the special liberty given for making such original sough pits, the uses of which were limited by the grant; it appearing upon the face of it that the grant of the sough was intended to have continuing operation while any coals in B.'s woody ground & adjoining lands remained to be gotten.

It would be very illogical to deduce a conclusion from the terms of a deed comprehending covenants, without which one of the parties could not have certain rights, & from their not expressly granting matters which would pass as incidents without being mentioned at all, that such matters in the nature of incidents were intended not to be granted (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—HODGSON v. FIELD (1806), 7 East, 613; 3 Smith, K. 1007. —— Erection of machinery—Engine house & pond for supply of engine.]—By a deed dated in 1630, the grantor conveyed in fee, farm land in the manor of A., in the county of Northumberland, "excepting & reserved out of the grant all mines of coal within the fields & territories of A. aforesaid, together with sufficient wayleave & stayleave to & from the said mines, with liberty of sinking & digging pit & pits," with a covenant by the grantees that they, their heirs & assigns, "should give such accustomed recompense for digging & breaking the ground within A. aforesaid, in which any pits should thereafter happen to be sunk & wrought, as formerly had been usually given & allowed there in like cases." By another deed of the same date, same parties conveyed in fee farm, to other persons, lands in the manor of H., adjoining A., with a like exception, reservation, & covenant. Qu.: whether under this reservation of a "sufficient wayleave" the coal owner had now a right to make a railway, for the purpose of carrying the coals from the mines for shipment with cuttings & embankments, & fenced in so as to exclude the owner of the soil:—Held: (1) the right was not confined to such ways as were used at the time of the grant; (2) under the reservation of liberty of sinking pits, the right of erecting a steam engine, & other machinery necessary for draining them, with all proper accessories passed as incident thereto; (3) under the reservation in the former deed, the coal owner could not carry over A. coals got in H., although forming part of the same mineral field.

(4) To an action of trespass for breaking pltf.'s close, & laying a railroad thereon, deft. justified under the reservation in the above deeds. Pltf. new assigned to the plea, that the trespasses were committed on other & different occasions, & to a greater extent than was necessary, & for other & different purposes, & on other parts of the close; to which there was judgment by default:—Held: on these pleadings, pltf. could not dispute that some species of railroad was within the reservation, but the question was whether the railroad was constructed in a direction or in a manner unauthorised by the reservation.

all things that are "depending on that right & necessary for the obtaining it," are reserved also. . . . Consequently, the coal owner had, as incident to the liberty to dig pits, the right to fix such machinery as would be necessary to drain the mines, & draw the coals from the pits. The case finds that the steam engine which was erected, was necessary for the winning & working the lower seams, which are the principal seams in that coalfield; & therefore deft. had a right to erect it. The pond for the supply of the engine, & the engine house, seem to have been necessary accessories to such an engine, & were therefore lawfully made (PARKE, B.).

Remedy for wrongful deposit of spoil—Measure of damage.]—Defts. having trespassed on pltfs.' land by tipping spoil thereon from their colliery:—Held: the amount of damages was not to be assessed by ascertaining merely the diminution in value of pltfs.' land, but the principle of the wayleave cases, Martin v. Porter, No. 567, ante; Jeyon v. Vivian, No. 701, ante; & Phillips v. Homfray, Fothergill v. Phillips, No. 548, ante, applied; namely, that if one person without leave of another uses the other's land for his own purposes he ought to pay for such user; therefore, as to so much of the land as was covered with spoil, the value of the land for the purpose for which it was used by the wrongdoers ought to be taken into account; as to the rest of the land the measure of damages was the diminution of the value thereof to pltfs. by reason of the wrongful acts of defts.—WHITWHAM v. WESTMINSTER BRYMBO COAL & COKE CO., [1896] 2 Ch. 538; 65 L. Nature of interest—Incorporeal hereditament—Grant of wayleave reserving royalty.]—The owner in fee of land demised to a railway co. for a term of years a wayleave over his land, with the right to make & use a railway thereover, reserving to himself, his heirs & assigns, a periodical payment on coals, etc., carried over any part of the railways comprehended in the co.'s special Act to Port B. The interest conferred upon the railway co., namely, a wayleave over land of the grantor, with the right to make a railway thereover, & with the other powers given to them, is, in my judgment, an "incorporeal hereditament, a property, & an estate capable of being inherited by the heir," if granted to an individual, "& of being assigned to a purchaser." C. Wayleave of Definite Kind.

1020. Reservation of waggon ways—Construction of railway.]—Pltf. was a lessee for a term of twenty-one years of prebendal lands, there being reserved to the lessors the woods, underwoods, mines, quarries, seams of clay, with full & free authority & power to enter & cut down, & to dig, win, work, get, & carry away same, with free ingress, egress, wayleave, & passage to & from the same, or to or from any other mines, quarries, & seams of clay, on foot & on horseback, & with carts & all manner of carriages; & also all necessary & convenient ways, passages, conveniences, privileges, & powers whatsoever, for the purposes aforesaid, & particularly of laying, making, & granting waggon ways in & over the demised premises, paying reasonable damages. The Vice-Chancellor, inclining to the opinion that the reservation did not enable the lessors to grant to a public co. a licence to make a railway for the purpose of conveying passengers & general merchandise, but was only intended to enable the lessors or their grantees to convey mineral produce & wood from the demised lands to or from adjacent lands, granted an injunction, restraining the lessors & their licencees from proceeding to make a railway for the former purpose, previous to the precise extent of the reservation being ascertained by the decision of a ct. of law. Upon affidavits filed by the licencees, stating, that the proposed railway was intended to be used for purposes & objects which should be held to be within the terms of the reservation; that the primary purpose of the railway was to convey mineral produce, & the scheme of general traffic a secondary object; & showing, that there was a considerable quantity of coal in the neighbourhood of the demised land, the injunction was dissolved:—Held: this being a question for a ct. of law, upon the construction of the reservation, the property ought to be protected, pending the necessary trial at law; & it was made a condition of granting the injunction, pltf. should proceed to a trial of the question at the earliest possible opportunity.—FARROW v. VANSITTART (1839), 1 Ry. & Can. Cas. 602, L. C.

1021. Grant of right to make roads & ways—Construction of railways & tramways.]—Coals & iron-works were demised, together with lands, & mines under other lands not included in the demise, with liberty to the lessees to make & use "roads and ways" over any of the lands, & to do all such other acts upon the lands as should be necessary for the purposes of the works, & the lessees covenanted to uphold & keep in good repair the furnaces & other works, houses & other buildings then standing & which during the term should be erected & built on the demised land & all other the demised premises, & at the expiration of the term to deliver up the property & "all ways & roads in, upon or under same lands" in such good order that the works might be continued by the lessor:—Held: (1) this covenant did not extend to trams fastened to sleepers not affixed to the freehold, which the tenant had placed upon roads for the purpose of using them as tramways, & the landlord therefore was not entitled to an injunction to restrain the tenant from disposing of them during the term.

(2) It is quite clear, as it seems to me, that "roads & ways" would not in all cases extend to railroads or tramways, & I apprehend, therefore, it must depend upon the nature & purposes of the instrument, taken in connection with such evidence as may be receivable upon the subject, whether, upon its true construction, the words "roads & ways" as there used were or were not intended to include & extend to railroads or tramways (TURNER, L.J.).—BEAUFORT (DUKE) v. BATES (1862), 3 De G. 1022. Right of passage over accommodation bridge—Laying tramway on bridge.]—An estate was intersected by a canal under the powers of its Act, & an accommodation bridge was built by the co., over which a private road, leading across the property to a high road, was carried. Coal pits were opened upon the estate, which, when the canal was made, had been used as a farm. For some time the coals were carried down to the canal by a tramway which did not cross the bridge. The coal owners subsequently carried the tramway across the bridge, excavating the soil of the roadway on the bridge & approaches, in order to carry their coals to a line of railway on the other side of the property. An action for trespass having been commenced, & a writ of injunction applied for by the canal co., the coal owners submitted to judgment in the action for £1 damages & costs, & gave an undertaking not to repeat the trespass complained of. The coal owners having a few months afterwards again laid down the tramway, but without breaking the soil on the bridge :—Held : the undertaking given by defts. formed a good ground for the interference of the ct., without going into the question of the right of defts. to make the tramway.—NEATH CANAL CO. v. YNISARWED RESOLVEN COLLIERY CO. (1875), 10 Ch. App. 450, L. JJ.

1023. Grant of " waggon or cart road "—Laying railroad or tramway.]—H., being the owner of certain land & the mines thereunder, by indenture conveyed the surface to C. but he excepted & reserved a " waggon or cart road " of the width of 18 feet, to be at all times thereafter kept in repair at his own costs & charges :—Held : these words would not enable H. to lay down a railroad or tramway for the carriage of coals raised from neighbouring collieries belonging to him.—Re BIDDER & NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE RY. D. Wayleave for Defined Purpose.

1024. User for other purposes not permitted—Grant for all purposes except carriage of coals—Carriage of coals not authorised.]—Where a landowner suffered the public to use, for several years, a road through his estate for all purposes, except that of carrying coals :—Held : this was either a limited dedication of the road to the public or no dedication at all, but only a licence revocable ; & a person carrying coals along the road after notice not to do so, was a trespasser. Semble : there may be a limited dedication of a highway to the public. —STAFFORD (MARQUIS) v. COYNEY (1827), 7 B. & C. 257 ; 5 L. 1025. ——— Grant for agricultural purposes—Carriage of minerals not authorised.]—User for twenty years of a way to a field used only for agricultural purposes does not give a right of way for mineral purposes. The owner of a field, with a right of way to it through an occupation road, agreed to sell the surface of the field reserving the minerals. The field had never been used for mining, & the vendor did not appear to have any present intention of working the minerals :—Held : (1) the vendor, having had a right to use the road for agricultural purposes only, could not prevent the purchaser from so altering the road as to make it unfit for the use of the vendor in working the minerals under the land agreed to be sold ; (2) even if the vendor had a right to use the road for minerals, inasmuch as he had no present intention of working the minerals, the ct. would not interfere.

We cannot grant a mandatory injunction unless he has clearly made out his right & I think also unless he made out that he had a present want of using the road (MELLISH, L.J.).—BRADBURN v. MORRIS, MORRIS v. BRADBURN (1876), 3 Ch. D. 812, C. A.

1027. ——— ——— ———.]—Case by a reversioner against a railway co. for entering & making a railway on his land. Plea, that, before the reversion of pltf., the Dean & Chapter of Durham were seised in fee, & by indenture between them & pltf. demised to pltf. the lands in question for a term " excepting & reserving the mines under the same, with power to dig, win & carry away the mines, with free ingress, egress & regress, wayleave & passage to & from the same, or to or from any other mines, lands & grounds, on foot & on horseback, & with carts & all manner of carriages, & also all necessary & convenient passages, conveniences, privileges & powers whatsoever, for the purposes aforesaid, & particularly of laying & making & granting waggon ways in & over the last-mentioned premises or any part thereof." Defts. then justified the making the railway as the servants of the Dean & Chapter, & by their authority. Replication, admitting the seisin in fee of the Dean & Chapter, & the demise to pltf., & that he had no other title except under such demise, de injuria, etc. On the trial it appeared that the railway co. had made a double line of railway on pltf.'s land, under a deed executed by the Dean & Chapter, & authorising the co. to make such a railway for the conveyance of passengers, goods, coals, wares & merchandise. The railway was constructed for the purpose of conveying general goods & passengers as well as coals, but had not been actually so used, & the railway was not more than was necessary for the carriage of the coals likely to be sent along it from the county with which it communicated. The judge directed the jury that, if they thought the railway was made for other purposes as well as for the carriage of coals, pltf. was entitled to their verdict :—Held : (1) if the railway was such a railway as the co., at the time when it was made, might lawfully make for the purposes of which, when made, they might lawfully use it, pltf., as reversioner, had no ground of complaint by reason of the intention of the co. also to use the railway for other purposes for which they had no right to use it & the direction of the judge was wrong ; (2) the proper construction of the exception clause in the indenture of demise by the Dean & Chapter to pltf. was, that the clause gave the Dean & Chapter, not a general power of making ways & granting wayleaves for all purposes, but for the limited purpose only of getting the excepted minerals ; (3) the proper question for the jury was, not whether the railway was made for other purposes as well as for the carriage of coals & minerals, but whether at the time when the road was made it had become necessary or expedient for the co. to make a road for the purpose of getting the excepted minerals, & if so, whether the road actually made was a proper road for that purpose, assuming it would be used for no other purpose.

We are clearly of opinion that the ways referred to in the exception in this case are confined to ways necessary or proper for enabling the lessors to get the matter excepted (TINDAL, C.J.).—DURHAM & SUNDERLAND RY. The co., pending a suit by them for specific performance, sold its line to a railway co. for public traffic, who procured an Act authorising them compulsorily to purchase the land in fee over which the wayleave had been granted:—Held: there had been a variation as to the parties & the subject-matter of the contract, & there was no right to specific performance.—MEYNELL v. SURTEES (1855), 3 Sm. & G. 101; 25 L. 1030. —— —— ——.]—An Act of Parliament for inclosing the moors & commons within the manor of Lanchester, in the county of Durham, contained a saving of all the seignoral rights of the Bishop of Durham as lord of the manor, & also provided, that the bishop & his successors, & their lessees & assigns, should at all times thereafter work & enjoy all mines & quarries lying under the said moors, & commons, together with all convenient & necessary ways & wayleaves over same, & full & free liberty of making & using any new roads or wagon ways over same, & for that purpose to remove obstructions, etc., & of winning & working the said mines & quarries belonging to the see & bishopric of Durham, wheresoever same should be, & of leading & carrying away all the coals, minerals, etc., to be gotten thereout, or out of any other lands & grounds whatsoever, etc.:—Held: this clause entitled the bishop to carry over the lands inclosed under the Act, not only coals & minerals got within or under those lands, but also those got out of any other mines belonging to the see of Durham; but not to carry coals, etc., got out of other mines worked by the bishop but not belonging to the see.

It is unreasonable to suppose that the legislature meant to give powers whereby damage might accrue to the occupier, for which he was not to receive any compensation, either from the bishop or from the fund provided by the Act (ROLFE, B.).—MIDGLEY v. RICHARDSON (1845), 14 M. & W. 595; 15 L. 1031. Effect of absence of defined route—Whether shortest practicable route must be followed.]—The power given by a local Act, enabling the proprietor of a mineral district to make roads & railways over lands of other persons from his mines to the canal, does not restrict him to the shortest practicable route, but enables him to adopt any more circuitous route which, in the bonâ fide exercise of his judgment, he may find expedient, provided the point at which he joins the canal is within four miles of the boundary of his estate.

Saving time by avoiding a lock:—Held: a sufficient reason for preferring a more circuitous route for this purpose.—RICHARDS v. RICHARDS (1859), John. 255; 23 J. P. 726; 70 E. R. 419.

1033. Damages.]—Where an Act of Parliament authorises the construction of a railway over the land of another, upon making compensation, & the railway is made without authority from the owner of the land, but is afterwards used for fifteen years with his knowledge, he will not be permitted to interfere with the possession. All he is entitled to is to have the compensation assessed & paid.

If the tramroad had been originally made without the authority of the owner of the land, & the owner having full notice of its existence had allowed pltf. to remain in possession of it without interference for 15 years, all that he could now do would be to require compensation for the damage occasioned to the land (ROMILLY, M.R.).

It makes no difference, in this view of the case, that the railroad was substituted for the tramroad, & that the railroad takes a different direction over these lands from that which the tramroad took (ROMILLY, M.R.).—MOLD v. WHEATCROFT (1859), 27 Beav. 510; 29 L. As to natural rights of riparian proprietor.]—See EASEMENTS, Vol. XIX., pp. 145 et seq.; WATERS & WATERCOURSES.

1049. Who is a riparian owner—Lessee of mines under land adjoining a stream—Not in possession of surface adjoining stream.]—An allegation that pltf. was possessed of mines, lands & premises, & of right ought to have had & enjoy, & still of right ought to have & enjoy the water of a stream which had been used to flow alongside the said lands & premises, is not supported by proof that pltf. was a lessee of mines under land adjoining the stream, with a grant from the surface owner of the use of the water for colliery purposes.—INSOLE v. JAMES (1856), 1 H. & N. 243; 27 L. T. O. S. 223; 4 W. R. 680.

1050. —— Lessee of colliery distant from river—Being also lessee of intervening surface land.]—The site of colliery works a mile from a river but connected with it by a strip of land about a chain in width, is not a riparian tenement, which expression connotes a reasonable proximity to the river.

In 1924 pltf. demised to defts. for ninety-nine years the minerals under land coloured red, containing 357 acres more or less, & also the surface of the land coloured blue containing 5 acres 2 roods 12 poles up to the middle of the river Alyn.

By clause 8 defts. were given the right to construct & use a mineral railway upon the surface of the blue land to be used solely for the purpose of the colliery working the demised minerals, & clause 9 provided that defts. could take & use water from any stream or watercourse flowing through or alongside the land coloured red, & pump & store the same for the purposes of their colliery. Defts. used the mineral railway to carry building & other material necessary for the building of a miners' village near the colliery.

The blue land was a chain in width for the half a mile of its extent from the riverside, & the remainder of the site of the railway to the colliery was acquired by defts. partly from pltf. & partly from others.

Defts. carried water from the river to their colliery by watermain laid about 18 inches below the surface of the blue land & took 600,000 gallons of water each week from the river, while the plant permitted of the taking more than three times that amount. On the evidence it was decided that the river Alyn did not flow through or alongside the land coloured red. Pltf. was a lower riparian owner, & claimed that defts.' colliery was not a riparian element, & that they were not entitled, as owners of the surface of the blue land, to the rights of riparian owners, & if they were, their user of the water was not an authorised user. The water taken by deft. from the river was not restored but was converted into steam:—Held: (1) the demise of the blue land constituted the defts. riparian proprietors, but were not entitled to take & use the water except on or in connection with the riparian tenement, & the colliery works were not a riparian tenement, which expression connoted a reasonable proximity to the river; (2) the taking of the water for extraordinary purposes without returning it to the river, was an unauthorised user, & as it amounted to a complete diversion of part of the river, & a confiscation of the rights of pltf. as lower riparian owner, it was not necessary for pltf., in order to secure relief, to prove damage or the future possible acquisition of prescriptive rights by defts.—ATTWOOD v. LLAY MAIN COLLIERIES, [1926] Ch. 444; 95 L. J. Ch. 221; 134 L. T. 268; 70 Sol. Jo. 265.

1051. Acquisition of right to conduct water over land—By artificial stream—Prescription.]—(1) A right to the flow of water along an artificial cut over the soil of another cannot be acquired under the Prescription Act, 1831 (c. 71), unless the circumstances under which the cut was made show that it was intended to be of a permanent character. H. occupied clay works &, for the more convenient use of them, in 1830, under an agreement with G., with the consent of G.'s landlord, made a leat or artificial cut for the purpose of conducting water from a brook flowing over the land in G.'s occupation, to his works. Pltf. in 1835 succeeded H. in the occupation of the clay works, & continued for upwards of twenty years, without interruption, the enjoyment of the leat:—Held: notwithstanding pltf. had no notice of the agreement between H. & G., there was evidence from which the jury might find that pltf. had not enjoyed the stream for twenty years as of right.

(2) One who by lease or by licence from the owner of the soil has the right of digging & working clay, or minerals, thereunder, has such an interest in the soil as will entitle him to claim under the Prescription Act, 1831 (c. 71), a right to the flow of water over the surface, by a twenty years' user. The rights of tin-bounders according to the customary law of Cornwall to the use of water within their tin-bounds, for the purpose of streaming their tin, will not prevent the acquisition by another of a prescriptive right under the Prescription Act, 1831 (c. 71), to the enjoyment of the water by a twenty years' user; nor will this right be affected by an agreement with the tin-bounders for a money payment to abstain from fouling the water by streaming their tin therein.—GAVED v. MARTYN (1865), 19 C. 1052. ——————.]—(1) A mine had from before the time of living memory been worked by tinbounders, according to the custom of Cornwall, which enables any person to mark out a piece of waste ground, the owner of which does not choose to work the mines under it, & work them without the consent of the owner, yielding to the owner a share of the proceeds. The bounders had from before the time of living memory used for the purpose of their works the water of an artificial watercourse arising in the land of another person. The bounders abandoned the mine in 1856, since which the owners had been in possession. A bill by the owners to restrain the diversion of the watercourse by the owner of the land in which it rose was dismissed by the judge, on the ground that there was no privity of estate between the owner & the bounders, & that the owner, therefore, could not claim an easement by prescription on the ground of their enjoyment of it:—Held: an injunction ought to be granted, for that it ought to be presumed that a right to use the waters had been acquired by arrangement with the owner of the mine as well as with the bounders.

(2) The estate or interest of tin bounders is of an anomalous character. They have a mere chattel, passing to exors., not to heirs, & they lose all their interest if they cease to work the mine. Their title is not derived from the owner of the land, though they are bound to make him a render dependent on the quantity of ore raised (LORD CRANWORTH, C.).

(3) The owners of the minerals in St. Austell have no common interest with the owner of the minerals in Roche though from their contiguity the mines may pass under one common name (LORD CRANWORTH, C.).—IVIMEY v. STOCKER (1866), 1 Ch. 1053. ——————.]—Defts. in 1834 demised to pltfs. the coal under the C. estate for fifty years, with powers to sink pits, make soughs, etc., erect engines, & make drains, etc., for supplying such engines with water, & also to do certain other acts on the surface for the better draining & working the demised mines & any other mines of which pltfs. might become lessees under the lands of any other persons. In 1836 pltfs. took a lease for thirty-five years of the C. colliery from a neighbouring landowner. In 1846 pltfs. made a drain about a mile long, chiefly on the C. estate, by which they diverted a small natural stream on the C. estate & brought it down to the O. Colliery, where they made reservoirs for the water at considerable expense. They did not ask leave to make the drain, but defts.' agent saw the work going on & encouraged it. In 1872 pltfs. became owners in fee of the O. Colliery. In 1884, when the lease from defts. expired, defts. stopped the drain & diverted the water. Pltfs., claiming a right by prescription to the water, commenced this action to restrain them from doing so. The Vice-Chancellor of the County Palatine held that the watercourse was made under the powers of the lease & that the right to the water expired at the end of the lease, & he dismissed the action:—Held: this dismissal was right, for that if the making the drain was not authorised by the lease, as to which the ct. gave no opinion, it was made & enjoyed, either under the belief of both parties that it was authorised by the lease, or under a comity between landlord & tenant, & that there was no enjoyment as of right so as to give the tenant a right to the water after the lease had expired.

What is the right claimed? It is a right of a peculiar kind, to enjoy an artificial watercourse. . . . There may be two kinds of rights claimed; first of all a man may claim a right to continue the enjoyment upon his land of the discharge on to his land of an artificial flow of water from a watercourse made by somebody else above. That is a very difficult kind of right to establish. The mere discharge of water by an upper proprietor upon the land of a lower, may easily establish a 1054. Liability of owner or lessee of mines—Artificial watercourse produced by draining of mine—Whether prescriptive right to continued flow of watercourse may be acquired—By lower proprietors.]—User of a stream of water produced by the artificial draining of a mine, for twenty years or upwards gives no right to the party who has so used it, against the owners of the mine, or the persons who have constructed the watercourse, either at common law or under the Prescription Act, 1831 (c. 71), to have the stream continued in the same channel.

Accordingly, about the year 1700, certain persons had in part constructed a sough, or underground watercourse, called the Cromford Sough, for the purpose of draining an extensive mineral field, in the district of the wapentake of Wirksworth, in the county of Derby. By agreements with the owners of the mines, the sough was carried on & completed; & in 1738, the proprietors leased the sough for 999 years, for a pecuniary consideration. When completed, the mouth of the Cromford Sough was in the village of Cromford; & near to the mouth was a stream of water, called the Bonsall Brook, into which the water of the sough discharged itself, forming a junction with the brook. After the sough had been constructed, & a constant flow of water conducted from the mines by means of it, R. Arkwright, as lessee, through whom pltfs. claimed, in 1772 constructed extensive cotton mills below the junction of the sough water with the Bonsall Brook, which mills have existed ever since & been turned by the united waters of the Cromford Sough & the Bonsall Brook. In 1789, R. purchased the land on which the cotton mills stood, & the fee simple in the mills & the manor of Cromford, including the lands through which the Cromford Sough was made; & in 1836, A., the lessor of pltfs., became the purchaser of the reversion expectant on the determination of the lease for 999 years, & acquired a portion of the interest of those lessees by a conveyance from some of them. About the year 1771, another sough, called the Meer Brook Sough was commenced by a co. of proprietors, not connected with the Cromford Sough at a considerably lower level than the Cromford Sough, for the purpose of unwatering a further portion of same mineral field, which, from its lower position, was not relieved of water by the latter sough. Defts. represented those proprietors. In 1813 by agreement with the proprietors of the Cromford Sough, the Meer Brook Sough was extended; & the water being found to flow into it, floodgates were constructed at its end, by which means when closed the water was still thrown back upon, & discharged by, the Cromford Sough; but when opened, the water escaped through them; & was thereby prevented from flowing to pltfs.' mills. In 1836, the floodgates were entirely removed, in order still further to extend the Meer Brook Sough, by which means the water was prevented from flowing down the Cromford Sough, to pltfs.' mills. In an action by the owners of the mills to recover damages for this diversion of the water by defts.:—Held: pltfs. were not entitled to recover, because the Cromford Sough, being an artificial watercourse, made with the sole object of unwatering the mines, & enabling their owners to get at the ores in the mineral field, pltf. had acquired no right to the use of the water of it at common law for any longer period than the mine-owners chose to continue it in that course for their own purposes; & pltfs. had acquired no right to the water by virtue of the Prescription Act, 1831 (c. 71), as their enjoyment of it was not "without interruption" or "of right" as against defts., the owners of the lower level of the mineral field, within the meaning of that statute.—ARKWRIGHT v. GELL (1839), 5 M. & W. 203; 2 Horn & H. 17; 8 L. SUB-SECT. 2.—DISCHARGE OF WATER.

A. Liability as between Adjoining Mine Owners.

(a) Discharge Due to Natural Agency.

1063. In ordinary course of working—General rule.]—The owner of a mine at a higher level than an adjoining mine has a right to work the whole of his mine in the usual & proper manner for the purpose of getting out the minerals in any part of his mine; & he is not liable for any water which flows by gravitation into such adjoining mine from works so conducted. But he has no right by pumping or otherwise to be an active agent in sending water from his mine into the adjoining mine.

If this crut had been made for the purpose of turning water into pltfs.' mine which would not otherwise have arrived there . . . we consider that the action would lie (ERLE, C.J.).—BAIRD v. WILLIAMSON (1863), 15 C. The bill alleged that the result of certain mining operations of defts. must inevitably be the tapping of a river bed, & the consequent flooding of the mines of defts. & pltf.; & it further alleged, in substance, that the operations in question were not legitimate mining operations, & could not result in any good to defts.; & it prayed for an injunction against defts.:—Held: the bill was sustainable.—CROMPTON v. LEA (1874), L. If in doing so in the ordinary course of working they should happen to tap springs or a water waste from which the water by gravitation rose to the surface & flowed down to a lower proprietor's land, this must be submitted to; but the mine owner is not entitled by pumping to increase this servitude or burden on one unwilling to submit to it by pumping up water which might never rise to the surface, or which might only do so more gradually & slowly & in much smaller volume (LORD SHAND).—YOUNG (JOHN) & CO. v. BANKIER DISTILLERY CO., [1893] A. Pltf. was possessed of a colliery, called A., & deft. of a colliery adjoining, called B., which was upon a higher level than A. Before deft. became possessed of colliery B., one Jones, who then held it, but between whom & deft. it was found, as a fact, that there was not any privity, either of contract or of estate, made three large holes, called thyrlings, in & through a vertical seam of coal, part of colliery A., & forming a barrier between the chambers in colliery A. & those in colliery B. At the time deft. first became the occupier of B. there was a large subterranean body of water therein, which communicated with, & was fed by, springs in the neighbourhood. This water was on a higher level than the chambers of B., & separated from them by a thick horizontal bar of coal which was part of colliery B. The chambers of B. were on a higher level than the thyrlings above mentioned, & the thyrlings were on a higher level than the chambers of A.; &, consequently, the effect of removing the horizontal bar of coal in B. necessarily was, that the water above mentioned would, of itself, flow into the chambers of B., & that a large portion thereof would also flow on of itself from the chambers of B., through the thyrlings, into the chambers of A. Deft., knowing that the thyrlings were then open, & that the effect of removing the horizontal bar of coal in B. would be as above stated, nevertheless did remove same, for the purpose of obtaining the coal, & so working his mine in the manner most advantageous to himself. In consequence of the removal of this horizontal bar of coal in B., the water flowed into the chambers of B., & thence, through the thyrlings, into the chambers of A., & inundated same:—Held: deft. was not responsible for the injury so occasioned.—SMITH v. KENRICK (1849), 7 C. 1068. —— Alteration in working resulting in increasing flow.]—H. demised adjoining lead mines to the S. co. & to the L. co. the latter being in a higher level. The leases were substantially the same, & the lease to the S. co. contained a clause "reserving always to H. & his tenants the L. co., or other tenants of their lands, the use of all levels in the S. grounds, with power of sinking & driving within the whole grounds in so far as same can be done without incommoding or interrupting the S. co.'s own proper works." The L. co. having altered their mode of working within their own limits, whereby they caused an increased flow of water into the levels of the S. co. & other damage:—Held: the S. co. were not entitled to an injunction to restrain the L. co. from so altering their works within their own limits, for the latter co. were entitled to work in their own way, & any damage caused by the L. co. was damnum absque injuria; but if the alteration had been made by sinking & boring in the S. grounds it would have been otherwise.—SCOTS MINES CO. v. LEADHILLS MINES CO. 1069. —— Damming up water.]—Defts. working mines in two places, A. & B., B. being to the deep of A., towards which the water from A. would naturally flow in a proper course of working, & to save pumping, stopped up the only opening between A. & B., so as to dam up the water in A., which they abandoned. The water thus dammed up rose so high as to overflow by natural gravitation into pltf.'s mines, through openings made by predecessors of pltf.'s trespassing in deft.'s mines:—Held: pltfs. were not entitled to any relief, but inasmuch as defts. had in the first instance, & until restrained by injunction, used artificial means, pipes, to send the water to pltfs.' mines, the bill was dismissed without costs.—LOMAX v. STOTT (1870), 39 L. 1071. —— Working resulting in cracking & subsidence of surface.]—(1) The right to work mines is a right of property, which, when duly exercised, begets no responsibility.

(2) The owner of minerals has a right to take away the whole of the minerals in his land, for such is the natural course of user (LORD BLACKBURN).

(3) Where mineral workings have caused a subsidence of the surface, & a consequent flow of rainfall into an adjacent lower coal-field, the injuries, being entirely from gravitation & percolation, are not a valid ground for any claim of damages.

(4) . . . Generally the owner of the surface made it matter of bargain for the benefit of the surface that when mines are worked out the surface should be restored. Where such a stipulation exists the owner or occupier of the surface has a right to complain if it be not restored, but that gives no claim to any one else (LORD BLACKBURN).—

1072. —— ——.]—A mine owner will not be liable to the owner of an adjacent mine for injury occasioned to such adjacent mine, where such injury proceeds from natural causes, in themselves beyond his control, though his own acts may have conduced to produce the injury, if his acts have only been those of the proper & ordinary working of his own mine, without default or negligence. But where for his own convenience he does something, e.g., divert the course of a stream, he must take care that the new course provided for it shall be sufficient to prevent mischief from an overflow, so that, even if that overflow should be directly & mainly occasioned by an act of nature, his own conduct in not so forming the new & diverted course for the stream of form & of sufficient capacity to carry off an accidental overflow of water, even of an exceptional kind, will be matter for consideration in determining the question of his liability.—FLETCHER v. SMITH (1877), 2 App. Cas. 781; sub nom. SMITH v. MUSGRAVE, 47 L. 1075. Piercing barriers—Trespass.]—A declaration stated pltfs. & defts. were owners of adjacent mines; defts. had trespassed on pltfs.' mine, & had carried away a quantity of coal; that water had arisen in defts.' mine, against which, but for the trespass of defts., the coal would have been a sufficient barrier; that thereupon it became & was the duty of defts. to prevent the water in their mine from flowing into pltfs.' mine; yet defts. neglected their said duty, whereby the water flowed into pltfs.' mine & prevented them from working the same:—Held: a good count in case.

There may, perhaps be a difference as regards the law between the barrier of a mine, & a fence above ground. If a wall is knocked down, the owner may maintain an action for the trespass; but he cannot by omitting to rebuild it, hold deft. always responsible for any consequential damage. But here, pltfs. say that the removal of the barrier is irreparable, &, therefore, the duty alleged in this declaration may well arise (POLLOCK, C.B.).—FIRMSTONE v. WHEELEY (1844), 2 Dow. & L. 203; 13 L. 1077. —— —— Consequential damage from inflow of water.]—The owner of a coal mine excavated as far as the boundary, which he was by custom entitled to do, & continued the excavation wrongfully into the neighbouring mine, leaving an aperture in the coal of that mine, through which water passed into it & did damage:—Held: the party excavating was liable in trespass for breaking into the neighbouring mine, but not in an action on the case for omitting to close up the aperture on his neighbour's soil; though a continuing damage resulted from its being unclosed, & therefore, the facts being proved as above stated, deft. was entitled to the verdict. Qu.: whether, under such circumstances, a legal obligation attaches on the trespasser to use means on his own land for preventing the flow of water. But, if it does, & an action is brought for not using such means, the declaration must allege the duty specifically; & pltf. cannot recover on a count stating merely that deft. wrongfully made the aperture & omitted for an unreasonable time to close it, whereby, etc. Nor can he recover at all for damage occasioned by the flow of water in consequence of the aperture remaining unclosed, if an action on the case has already been brought for making the aperture & letting in the water, which action was referred to arbn., & pltf. being made party to the reference in respect of any injury to him by any of the matters alleged in the declaration in such action, has had damages awarded & paid to him for such injury: although the damage last complained of is subsequent to the award & payment.—CLEGG v. DEARDEN (1848), 12 Q. 1086. —— Diversion not amounting to appropriation—Increase of burden on lower owner's mine.]—Defts., the owners of a mining property, sunk a shaft by which they tapped the water which had formerly found its way into certain old workings on their own ground, & had thence percolated into the pltfs.' mines. Defts. then made a borehole at the bottom of the shaft. It was admitted that the making it was not in due course of mining, but only for the purpose of getting rid of the water. The effect of the borehole was to let off the water into the above-mentioned old workings on defts.' ground, whence it percolated into pltfs.' works in same way in which it would have done if neither shaft nor borehole had ever been made:—Held: defts. had not by making the shaft so appropriated the water as to lay themselves under an obligation to keep it from coming upon pltfs.' land, & as the effect of defts.' operations was not to throw upon pltfs.' land any burden which it had not borne before, pltfs.' case failed.—WEST CUMBERLAND IRON & STEEL CO. v. KENYON (1879), 11 Ch. B. Liability of Surface Owners.

1087. Escape of water collected & retained on land—Negligent execution of drainage works.]—Defts., who were trustees of a turnpike road, converted an open ditch, which used effectually to carry off the rain water from the road, into a covered drain, placing therein catchpits & gratings to admit the water to such drain. The catchpits & gratings being insufficient in storms & heavy showers to admit the whole of the water, the overplus overflowed the road, & eventually infiltrated to pltf.'s colliery, causing considerable damage. He first complained to defts. in July, 1859, when they made some alterations; being again damaged, he complained a second time in December following, & then brought his action. It was objected that the action was not brought in time, inasmuch as more than three months had elapsed since the act first complained of was committed, the General Turnpike Act, 1822 (c. 126), s. 147, requiring the action to be brought within three months after "the fact committed":—Held: the action was maintainable, & was brought in time; for, although a party cannot be allowed to bring a fresh action because there has been a fresh damage, yet when there has been, as in the present case, not only a fresh damage, but a continuance of the wrongful act which caused it, that is a new cause of action, in respect of which the party injured may sue.—WHITEHOUSE v. FELLOWES (1861), 10 C. 1088. —— Offensive water from manufactory—Percolating into adjacent mine.]—Deft. allowed a noxious & offensive refuse water to flow from his manufactory into an old pit on his own land, but which percolated under ground into pltf.'s colliery. Deft. was restrained by perpetual injunction. On a bill to restrain a nuisance, a delay of six months in filing the bill, though important on an interlocutory application, held no bar to relief by injunction at the hearing of the cause.—TURNER v. MIRFIELD (1865), 34 Beav. 390; 55 E. 1089. —— Without negligence or wilfulness.]—A. was the lessee of mines. B. was the owner of a mill standing on land adjoining that under which the mines were worked. B. desired to construct a reservoir, & employed competent persons, an engineer & a contractor, to construct it. A. had worked his mines up to a spot where there were certain old passages of disused mines; these passages were connected with vertical shafts which communicated with the land above, & which had also been out of use for years, & were apparently filled with marl & the earth of the surrounding land. No care was taken to block up these shafts, & shortly after water had been introduced into the reservoir it broke through some of the shafts, flowed through the old passages, & flooded A.'s mine:—Held: A. was entitled to recover damages from B. in respect of this injury.—RYLANDS v. FLETCHER (1868), L. 1090. Flooding of mine due to opening of canal sluice—"Act of God."]—Pltfs., owners of collieries, sued defts., proprietors of a canal constructed under an Act of Parliament, for damages caused to their mines by water which overflowed from the canal into a brook, & thence into the mines. They also in the alternative claimed to be entitled to a mandamus for the summoning of a jury to assess compensation for same injury, as being one caused by the works which the canal co. were authorised to construct & maintain. It was found in the special case stated by an official referee that on the occasion of an extraordinary rainfall defts. opened a sluice, & discharged from the canal into a brook more water than the latter was able to carry off, the consequence being that the brook overflowed into pltfs.' mines. It was found further that if the sluice had not been so opened the canal bank would shortly have burst; that the adjacent country & pltfs.' mines would have been inundated; that the course which defts. adopted to avert such a catastrophe was a prudent one, & the only effectual one which could have been adopted in the emergency; that so far as pltfs.' mines were concerned, the opening of the sluice caused them to be flooded some hours sooner than they would otherwise have been, but that no additional damage was caused thereby to pltfs., the inundation being inevitable by reason of the excessive rainfall & consequent accumulation of water:—Held: (1) upon these findings, that even assuming defts.' act to have been a wrongful one, it was injuria absque damno, & therefore not a ground of action; (2) the compensation clauses of the Acts of Parliament did not apply to such a case.—THOMAS v. BIRMINGHAM CANAL CO. The bill prayed for an injunction to restrain deft. from conveying the coal from the H. estate, & from making or allowing the road or way to remain through the C. estate, & for an account. A demurrer was allowed on the ground that pltf. showed no title to the place in which the wrong complained of was committed, & no possession of the subsoil of the C. estate. On appeal the demurrer was overruled.

1098. Hours below ground—Contravention of statutory provisions—"Connivance"—Bonâ fide omission of entries in register.]—Applt. was manager of a coal mine in which several onsetters were below ground for periods longer than that provided by Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1908 (c. 57), on numerous dates extending over several months. No entry as to the cause was made in the register kept by applt. under Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1908 (c. 57), as applt. was unable to ascertain a definite reason for the men failing to reach the surface in proper time, but on some occasions he cautioned the men. Applt. had acted in good faith & he had not aided the men in avading the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1908 (c. 57), or encouraged them to disobey it. A ct. of summary jurisdiction convicted applt. of connivance at the contravention of Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1908 (c. 57), but quarter sessions quashed the conviction:—Held: the order of quarter sessions must be affirmed.—GREGORY v. WALKER (1912), 77 J. 1099. —— —— Workmen working in shifts.]—Resp. co. were the owners of a colliery, in which two workmen, working in shifts, were on certain dates below ground for twelve & a half hours, but some of the workmen in each of the shifts returned to the surface within a period of seven hours from the time when the last workman in each of such shifts left the surface. Resp. co. were summoned for conniving at a contravention of Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1908 (c. 57), s. 1, as amended by Coal Mines Act, 1919 (c. 28), s. 1, in that the two workmen were below ground, for the purpose of their work, & of going to & from their work, more than seven hours:—Held: as the excess of time over seven hours could not be attributed to the time permitted for lowering & raising the shifts, the mere fact that some of the workmen in the shifts returned to the surface within seven hours from the time when the last workman in the shift left the surface did not constitute a compliance with Coal Mines Act, 1919 (c. 28), & the justices ought to have convicted.—WING v. SKINNER & HOLFORD, LTD. 1100. Extension of hours—Liability of workman for non-compliance.]—Workmen in a coal mine were working under an agreement of service which provided that the hours of labour of workmen employed below ground shall be such as are authorised by Coal Mines Regulation Act of 1908 (c. 57). The manager duly gave notice that on two specified days the hours of working in the mine—namely, eight hours, would be extended by one hour on each day. The workmen on each day refused to work the extra hour, on the ground that such extra hour was not "authorised" by Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1908 (c. 57). Upon a summons by the employers against one of the workmen for breach of his contract in refusing to work the extra hours:—Held: the time having been properly extended in pursuance of Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1908 (c. 57), the extended time was to be substituted for the time as fixed by Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1908 (c. 57), & therefore the extra hours were authorised by Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1908 (c. 57), within the terms of the agreement, & the workman in refusing to work the extra hours had committed a breach of the agreement.—ROBINSON v. INSOLES, LTD. The amount earned by him depended upon the number of tubs drawn by him, & his wages were paid fortnightly upon the Friday following the end of the fortnight, the total amount of work done each day by him being ascertained daily. On the day preceding pay day a pay note was handed to each worknan. On a certain occasion upon receipt of the pay notes a dispute arose between one of the putters & the co., & as a consequence upon the following day the putters, including pltf., declined to work, & laid the pit idle. They were then informed by the masters that they had broken their contract, & that all wages earned

On the Monday following the putters presented themselves prepared to work, but were told they would not be allowed to resume unless they signed on afresh. Subsequently, by arrangement they resumed work without prejudice on the following day. Pltf. sued defts. to recover the amount of the wages forfeited by defts. for the four days' work done by him after the conclusion of the fortnight in respect of which the disputed pay note was given, & also claimed damages for breach of contract on the ground that the refusal to allow him to work on the Monday was a breach by defts. of their contract with him, it being common knowledge that laying the pit idle for a day or two was a common practice, & did not amount to a repudiation of their contract by the putters:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to recover damages for breach of contract, as the masters were justified in dismissing him in consequence of his refusal to work; but as each day's wages became due daily, although they were not paid over to him until the expiration of a fortnight, he was entitled to recover the wages for the four days upon which he had worked before his dismissal.—PARKIN v. SOUTH HETTON COAL CO. 1106. Right to wages during stoppage—Required to render workings safe.]—Pltfs., miners employed by defts. at their colliery, refused to work in the mine on the ground that it was unsafe owing to the condition of the shafts. By reason of the fall of part of the lining of one of the shafts it had become unsafe, & the other shaft being also unsafe, pltfs. refused to go down into the mine until sufficient work had been done to render the shafts safe. The dangerous condition of the shafts was not due to any negligence or breach of duty on the part of defts. The mine was closed by defts. in order to enable them to execute the necessary repairs, & pltfs. in consequence sustained a loss of wages. They claimed declarations that defts. were liable to pay them wages, or alternatively damages, in respect of their loss of wages while they were absent from work by reason of the mine being closed:—Held: (1) in order to give effect to the presumed intention of both parties to the contract of employment, it was necessary to imply a term that, in the events which happened, the mine owners should not be liable to pay wages or damages to their workmen during the time which was reasonably required to put the mine into a safe condition; (2) defts. were not liable to pay pltfs. damages for the breach of any duty imposed on them by Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), inasmuch as it was not reasonably practicable for defts. to prevent the shafts from getting into an unsafe condition, & they were therefore protected by Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), s. 102 (8).—BROWNING v. CRUMLIN VALLEY COLLIERIES, [1926] 1 K. B. Deductions.

See Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 12.

1107. What deductions may be made—In respect of "mineral contracted to be gotten"—Slack.]—Persons were employed in a mine under a contract that coals should be paid for at 1*s.* 6*d.* per ton, & heading slack at 7*d.* per ton, no other slack to be paid for; all other slack to be deducted from the different places in proportion to their loading, & a premium of 2*d.* per ton on the coal to be paid to all those places whose boxes of coal did not contain an average of more than 112 lbs. of dust each per week.

The coal, including the slack gotten, was weighed close to the pit's mouth & was then sorted & carried 40 yards & shot on to a screen, more slack being caused by the operations: a note of the slack which passed through the screen was taken by a person employed only by the mine owners, & the weight of the slack was deducted from the weight at the pit's mouth. The wages of the miners were paid according to the weight of the coal after thus deducting the slack.

In an action by the miners to recover from their employers the difference between the wages so ascertained & the full wages if no such deduction had been made:—Held: the miners were entitled to recover; (1) (LORD HALSBURY, C., & LORDS HERSCHELL & MACNAGHTEN) Because by the contract the amount of wages paid depended "on the amount of mineral gotten" within Mines Regulation Act, 1872 (c. 76), s. 17, but the miners were not paid "according to the weight of the mineral gotten," nor was "such mineral truly weighed accordingly," within that sect.; for "the mineral contracted to be gotten" was coal including slack, & slack was not "material other than mineral contracted to be gotten," & was therefore not one of the deductions allowed by that sect.; (2) (LORDS BRAMWELL & FITZGERALD) Because though the deductions were not in contravention of sect. 17, the weights were not ascertained in the manner required by sect. 18.—NETHERSEAL COLLIERY CO. v. BOURNE (1889), 14 App. Cas. 228; 59 L. 1108. —— —— Small coal—Obtained by "screening" at pit's mouth.]—Pltfs. were employed in defts.' collieries to cut large coal at wages which depended on the weight gotten. The coal was cut as large coal, but a considerable amount of small coal was produced in the conveyance of the coal to the pit's mouth & "screening" it. The coal raised was screened at the pit's mouth, & defts. made deductions from pltfs.' wages in respect of the small coal found in it. Pltfs. sued defts. for the amounts so deducted:—Held: (1) the small coal was part of "the mineral contracted to be gotten" within Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 12 (1), & the deductions were illegal, & pltfs. were therefore entitled to recover; (2) the sums allowed for the small coal were to be at the same rate as that paid for the large coal.—BRACE v. ABERCARN COLLIERY CO., HUGGINS v. LONDON & SOUTH WALES COLLIERY CO., [1891] 2 Q. 1109. —— Agreement for average deduction—Validity.]—Applt. was employed by resps. at their colliery upon the terms that he should be paid wages according to the weight of coal gotten by him; that he should not leave his employment without giving fourteen days' notice, & that deductions should be made in respect of dirt sent up to the surface with the coal; & the following special mode of determining those deductions was agreed upon between resps. & the persons employed by them: About one tub in twenty sent up to the surface was selected at random for testing. The dirt in that tub was separated from the coal & weighed, & if the tub contained more than a certain weight of dirt, the man who sent it up was not paid anything in respect of the coal therein. The men sending up the other nineteen tubs were paid on the total weight of the contents of each tub as though it contained coal only:—Held: the proviso in Coal Mines Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 12, was controlled by the first part of that sect., & did not authorise any agreement by which a person employed was not to be paid on the weight of the coal in a particular tub; the agreement with respect to the special mode of making deductions for dirt was therefore illegal, but the illegality in that respect did not vitiate the whole contract of employment so as to justify applt. in leaving without giving fourteen days' notice.

> The proviso . . . says that deduction shall be made in respect of stones or substances other than the mineral contracted to be gotten. Now, what are you to deduct from? From what is in the tub—not from the actual mineral in the tub, but from all that is in the tub . . . & the deduction must be from the weight in the tub, not from the men's wages. It is true that the amount of the wages depends upon the weight of the mineral contracted to be gotten; but I think that the wording of the first part of the sect. & of the proviso bring one to the conclusion that the deduction must be from weight, & must be a deduction in respect of things other than the actual minerals (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—KEARNEY v. WHITEHAVEN COLLIERY CO., [1893] 1 Q. 1110. —— —— ——.]—A miner who was paid by weight, & who worked in a seam in which coal was mixed with stones & dirt, sued the mineowners for a sum for unpaid wages representing the aggregate amount of deductions made for stones & dirt from the hutches sent up by him during a specified period, upon the ground that such deductions were illegal. It was a term of pursuer's employment that he should be paid for clean coal only. The weigher appointed by the mineowner made a deduction for stones & dirt of a fixed amount per hutch based upon an average arrived at by crow-picking sample hutches & deducting from the gross weight the weight of the stones & dirt therein contained, & this amount was well within the average weight of stones & dirt found in the hutches. The miners agreed with the mineowners that deductions should be made in accordance with Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 12, but no special mode of determining the deductions was agreed upon. A checkweigher appointed by the miners objected to the system of averages adopted by the weigher & claimed that the amount of the deductions should be ascertained by crow-picking each hutch separately, which was admittedly impracticable, but the weigher continued his former practice:—Held: the deductions had not been determined in the manner prescribed by the sect., but that by the terms of the sect. pursuer was entitled to payment in respect only of "the mineral contracted to be gotten"—namely, coal—& that he had failed to establish his claim.—COLTNESS IRON CO. v. DOBBIE, [1920] A. (a) Appointment and Tenure of Office.

1117. Appointment—Two seams in one mine.] In a mine not divided into parts under Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 19, there were two seams of coal worked as one mine by separate gangs of miners paid according to the weight of mineral gotten by them:—Held: the two seams together constituted a "mine" within Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 13, & consequently the miners working in one of the seams could not under Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 13) appoint a checkweigher in respect of the mineral gotten from that seam.—THORPE v. DAVIES, [1908] 2 K. 1118. Tenure of office—Effect of dismissal of miners by whom checkweigher appointed.]—Applt., who was a miner in resp.'s coal mine, was appointed checkweigher by the other miners under 35 & 36 Vict. c. 76, s. 18, & acted in that capacity, & was paid by the miners. Subsequently resps. dismissed all the miners & closed the mine. No notice was given to applt. by resps., or by or on behalf of the miners. On the mine being re-opened a short time afterwards, applt. claimed to be still checkweigher & to be entitled to perform the duties of that office, & brought an action against resps. for preventing his doing so:—Held: applt. had, on the dismissal of the miners, ceased to be checkweigher, & the action could not be maintained.—WHITEHEAD v. HOLDSWORTH (1878), 4 Ex. 1120. Who may be liable to contribute—Miner temporarily paid by the day.]—Pltf., a checkweigher at a mine, duly appointed under Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 13, by a majority of the persons employed in the mine who were paid according to the weight of mineral gotten by them, sued deft., a miner who was being temporarily paid by the day, to recover the proportion of his wages as a checkweigher alleged to be due from deft. In addition to weighing the coal sent up by the miners, who were paid according to the amount of coal gotten, pltf. also weighed the coal sent up by deft., & these services were of benefit to deft. inasmuch as, when the coal sent up by him reached such a quantity that if paid by the amount gotten he would receive more than he was being paid by the day, he might enter into a new arrangement with the proprietors of the mine. Pltf. declined to pay deft., on the ground that, being paid by the day, he was not liable to contribute to the checkweigher's wages. Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 14, provides that a checkweigher appointed by a majority of the persons employed at a mine who are paid according to the amount of mineral gotten by them may recover from any person for the time being employed at such mine & so paid, his proportion of the checkweigher's wages:—Held: deft., being paid by the day & not by the weight of coal gotten by him, was not liable, under the statute, to contribute to pltf.'s wages, nor, in the above circumstances, was he liable under any contract to do so.—OXTON v. WILLIAMS (1910), 101 L. Resp. applied to justices for a summary order for applt.'s removal, under 35 & 36 Vict. c. 76, s. 18, & the justices, although it did not so appear on the face of the conviction, admitted evidence to show, & found as a fact, that the said intimidation took place on resp.'s premises, where applt. had no right to be, except in his capacity of checkweigher. It did not appear that this intimidation caused any impediment or interruption of the working of the mine, but the justices made the order of removal:—Held: applt. had misconducted himself within 35 & 36 Vict. c. 76, s. 18, & the justices were justified in making the order.—PRENTICE v. HALL (1877), 37 L. Semble: a checkweigher removed under Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 76), s. 13, cannot immediately be reappointed.

The word henceforth means from the date of the order, & does not mean henceforth & for ever. I do not think that we are called upon to decide whether removal means permanent removal, but, if we had to decide that point, there are good grounds for thinking that it does mean some sort of permanent removal, because of the words 'stationing of another checkweigher in his place" (DARLING, J.).—R. v. LLEWELLYN, Ex p. SQUIRE (1906), 96 L. (a) In General.

See Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2).

1128. Validity of prior agreement for higher rate of wage—During temporary cessation of work due to emergency.]—By an agreement made prior to 1912 between defts. & their workmen it was agreed that if a fatal accident occurred in defts.' mine before 12 o'clock, the day wagemen in the district in which the accident happened, if they came out, should be paid a full day's wage:—Held: in the case of a workman who was getting a higher wage than the minimum rate, this agreement was not superseded by a rule made under Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2), which provided that, in the event of any interruption of work during a shift due to an emergency over which the management had no control, the workman should only be paid such a proportion of the minimum rate as the time he worked bore to the total number of hours of the shift.—MACKINNON v. NORTH'S NAVIGATION COLLIERIES (1889), LTD. (1913), 29 T. L. R. 615.

1129. Jurisdiction of domestic tribunal—Dispute as to deductions—Miner in receipt of wages exceeding minimum rate.]—(1) A county ct. judge whose decision was affirmed by the Div. Ct. held that the provisions of Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2), are applicable, notwithstanding that a workman may be receiving an amount for wages in excess of the minimum rate settled under Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2), & that the powers of the domestic tribunal to decide a dispute as to the regularity & efficiency of a miner's work are not thereby ousted:—Held: the county ct. judge had in fact found, & there was evidence on which he could find, that the workman's wages were based on the statutory minimum rate, & were not the subject of a common law contract.

(2) Where a miner is suing for his minimum wage, & a dispute under Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2), is before the domestic tribunal, the proper course is for the ct. to adjourn the trial in order that the dispute may be decided.—FAIRBANKS v. FLORENCE COAL & IRON CO., LTD., [1915] 2 K. worked on "sett" system.]—Pltf. was a filler employed at defts.' colliery. In that colliery the coal was worked by colliers in "setts." Each "sett" consisted of two or more colliers, & to each "sett" one or more fillers were attached. The fillers' duty was to load the tubs with the coal when gotten by the colliers, & the tubs were then sent to the surface, where the weight of the coal sent up was credited to the "sett." The colliers were paid by defts. at the end of each week according to the weight of the coal credited to the "sett," one of the colliers, called the contractor, receiving payment of the amount due to the "sett." A filler was paid a daily wage, which had been for some years before the passing of Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2), 5*s.* 11*d.* less 2*d.* for subscriptions, & he was paid his remuneration each week by the contractor of the "sett" out of the money received by him from defts. The filler was engaged by the colliery manager; he as well as the colliers signed a document headed "Terms of Employment," under which he agreed to be bound by the regulations of the colliery; he was sent by an official of the colliery to work with a "sett," & if the "sett" were dissatisfied with him it asked the management to remove him; & his dismissal rested with the management. There was evidence that, apart from an arrangement made in 1908 between colliery owners & colliers as to "hard or difficult places," no allowance was made by defts. when paying the contractor of the "sett" in respect of the fillers' wages, that the fillers looked to the contractor for payment, & that if the amount paid by defts. to the contractor was not sufficient to pay all, the contractor was still bound to pay the filler his full wages. After the passing of Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2), the minimum rate of wages for a filler was fixed at 4*s.* 10*d.* a day. For the week ending June 19, 1912, the contractor paid pltf. at the rate of 4*s.* 10*d.* a day, & pltf. brought an action in the county ct. against defts. to recover the balance of the wages, namely, the difference between 4*s.* 10*d.* & 5*s.* 11*d.* a day. The county ct. judge found that there was a custom to pay a filler 5*s.* 9*d.* per day clear, that the collier had always paid it out of his tonnage wages, except in case of payment under the hard & difficult place agreement, but that there was no privity of contract between the defts. & the filler. He accordingly gave judgment for defts. The Div. Ct. held that the evidence was conclusive that defts. were the employers of pltf. & bound to pay him his wages, & they gave judgment for pltf.:—Held: (1) there was evidence upon which the county ct. judge was entitled to find that apart from Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2), there was no privity of contract under which pltf. could claim wages from defts.

With regard to Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2):—Held: (2) (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.) the effect of the Act was to render defts. as colliery owners liable to pay pltf. his wages; (3) (BUCKLEY & KENNEDY, L.JJ.) the Act did not make any alteration in the person liable to pay the wages, & did not create a contract to pay wages where none existed independently of the Act, & defts. were not liable to pltf.—RICHARDS v. WREXHAM & ACTON COLLIERIES, LTD., DAVIES v. SAME, [1914] 2 K. 1131. —— Mine worked on "stall" system.]—Defts. were the owners of a colliery in which the colliers worked in gangs, each gang working in a separate "stall" & consisting of one or more "stallmen" or "contractors" to whom the stall was assigned by defts., & usually also of several "daymen" who assisted the stallmen. Pltf. was employed at the mine as a dayman, &, like the other employees, he had entered upon his employment by signing a form of contract which provided that he would serve defts. (inter alia) on the terms of the contract rules in force at the colliery. Pltf. worked in a stall for several days, & the amount of his wages & of other wages earned in the stall was paid by defts. to one of the stallmen, who absconded without paying pltf. Pltf. brought an action against defts. in the county ct. claiming his wages for these days at the minimum rate fixed for the district. The evidence went to show that the practice at the colliery was that defts. paid to a stallman on the fortnightly pay day the net aggregate amount due for the work done in the stall, & that out of that amount the stallman paid to each dayman whatever wage, not less than the minimum wage, the latter, in the opinion of the stallman, was worth. The county ct. judge, having regard to the terms of contract, & of the contract rules, & to the evidence, held that the contract between pltfs. & defts. did not impose any obligation on defts., to pay pltf. his wages; &, further, that if it did impose any such obligation on defts., they were to be discharged therefrom on paying the stallman; & he gave judgment for defts. The Div. Ct. affirmed the judgment of the county ct. judge. Pltf. appealed:—Held: (1) there was evidence to support the conclusions of the county ct. judge as to the nature of the contract between pltf. & defts.; &, (2) as there was no already existing contract between pltf. & defts. as to the payment of wages, Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2), s. 1 (1), did not create such a contract.—HIGGINSON v. BLACKWELL COLLIERY CO., PITCHFORD v. SAME (1914), 84 L. 1132. —— ——.]— A colliery co. usually assigned two workmen, a collier & a filler, to each underground working place or stall, but occasionally a double or treble set of men, composed of an equal number of colliers & fillers, worked together in one "stall." The men were paid upon a tonnage rate in accordance with the coal gotten. A weekly pay-note was made out to the number of the "stall" & the money was paid to the collier, or, in case of double or treble sets, to one of the colliers. The division of the pay between the collier & the filler was a matter of private bargain between them. On entering the service of the colliery co. all the workmen, whether colliers or fillers, were bound to sign three documents, one of which contained the bye-laws of the co. By bye-law 2, "All persons employed . . . shall receive wages & payment according to the current rate of wages for the time being at the colliery." By bye-law 13, "All persons working under or for or paid by contractors or other persons shall be deemed to be the servants of the owners of the colliery to the extent only that they shall be bound to obey these bye-laws & the other rules of the colliery, but the owners of the colliery shall not be bound to see to the payment of or be liable for the wages due to such persons after they have paid the contractor or other persons for whom such persons work." A filler worked with a collier in a stall under an arrangement whereby the collier first took for himself for each shift 1*s.* & the balance was equally divided in accordance with the number of shifts worked by each of the two men. In a certain week the balance coming to the filler under this arrangement was less than the minimum wages to which he was entitled under Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2). The filler claimed a minimum wage from the colliery co. The co., who for all purposes other than the payment of wages were the employers of the filler, pleaded that they were not his employers for the purposes of Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2):—Held: assuming without deciding that the "contract of employment" mentioned in Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2), s. 1 (1), meant a contract of employment at wages, an obligation was imposed on the colliery co. to pay wages to the filler by bye-law 2, & was not taken away by bye-law 13, & the co. were the employers of the filler within Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2), & were liable to pay him a minimum wage.

For the purposes of Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2), s. 1 (1), it is not necessary that the employer should be also the paymaster of the workman.—CHURM v. DALTON MAIN COLLIERIES, LTD., [1916] 1 A. 1133. —— ——.]—Pltf., who was employed underground as a holer by a colliery co., on entering the service of the co. signed an agreement whereby he agreed to serve the co. on the terms of certain contract rules & empowered the co. to make certain specified deductions from wages. By rule 2 of the contract rules coal was to be paid for by weight, & by rule 3, "all persons working under or for stallmen or contractors shall be deemed to be servants of the co. to the extent only that they shall be bound to obey these contract rules & the other rules & regulations of the colliery." The colliery was worked on the butty system. Weekly pay checks were made out to the number of the stall showing the net total amount earned in the stall calculated upon a tonnage rate in accordance with the coal gotten, & the money was received by the stallmen or buttyman, who handed to the holders & fillers employed in the stall wages regulated by the work done by each in accordance with the recognised rates of wages for the colliery & kept the balance for himself. Owing to hard holing the wages received from the stallman by pltf., who was usually paid by piece work, were during a period of four months less than the minimum wage to which he was entitled under Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2). In answer to an action in the county ct. by pltf. against the co. for payment of the balance required to make up the minimum wage the co. maintained that they were not the employers of pltf. within Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2), & that their liability was absolved by payment to the stall of an aggregate amount sufficient to provide a minimum wage all round. The county ct. judge gave judgment for pltf.:—Held: (1) there was an employment of pltf. by the co. at wages, & rule 3 did not apply to a person who was under an independent contract of service already the servant of the co.; (2) overruling Richards v. Wrexham & Acton Collieries, Ltd., Davies v. Same, No. 1130, ante, for the purposes of Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2), s. 1 (1), it was not necessary that the employer should be also the paymaster of the employee; (3) payment by the co. to the stall of a sum sufficient to provide a minimum wage to each of the workmen under a different method of distribution was not a discharge of their obligation under Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1902 (c. 2).—HOOLEY v. BUTTERLEY CO., LTD., [1916] 2 A. 1136. Action by miner—Condition precedent to action—Production of certificate of right to minimum wage.]—By rule 4 of the rules for the district of Derbyshire, exclusive of South Derbyshire, made under Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2), for the purpose of ascertaining what sum is due to a workman for any pay-week in respect of his right to wages at the minimum rate regard shall be had to the amount of his actual earnings during the period consisting of the pay-week in question & as few preceding pay-weeks as shall be necessary to make up a period during which the colliery has worked not less than ten full days, provided that the period shall in no case be longer than four pay-weeks in all. By rule 7, if any question shall arise whether any workman in the district is a workman to whom the minimum rate of wages is applicable, the question shall be decided, in the last resort, by the district board, &, failing a settlement by them, by the independent chairman, & a certificate of the decision shall be signed by the chairman & vice-chairman of the board or by the independent chairman, as the case may be, & such decision shall in every case be final & binding. By reason of a strike of miners work at deft.'s colliery in the early part of 1912 ceased for about six weeks. On Apr. 10, work was resumed, but for the pay-week ending on Apr. 16, the colliery worked only one day, & for the pay-week ending on Apr. 23, the colliery worked only five & a half days. Pltf., who was a miner employed at the colliery, claimed to be entitled to wages at the minimum rate settled under Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2), for the pay-week ending on Apr. 23. Defts. disputed his claim, & the question came before the district board & finally before the independent chairman, who gave a certificate that by reason of rule 4, pltf. was excluded from the operation of Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2), s. 1, & was not a workman to whom the minimum rate of wages was applicable in respect of the pay-week in question. Pltf. thereupon brought an action in the county ct. to recover the difference between the minimum rate of wages & the amount actually earned by him for that week:—Held: it was a condition precedent to pltf.'s right to sue that he should have obtained a certificate that he was a workman to whom the minimum rate of wages was applicable; rule 4 was not ultra vires; & therefore the action was not maintainable.—RANDLE v. CLAY CROSS CO., LTD., [1913] 3 K. Defts. delivered a special defence that the dispute between the parties, not stating what it was, had been referred to an umpire in pursuance of the district rules, & the umpire had certified in writing that pltf. was not entitled to the sum claimed. At the trial pltf. gave evidence that he was a miner employed at the colliery during the period in question, & upon his counsel admitting that the dispute, not stating what it was, had been properly submitted to the umpire under the district rules & that he could not put in the certificate of the umpire, the county ct. judge, upon the authority of Randle v. Clay Cross Co., Ltd., No. 1136, ante, gave judgment for defts.:—Held: the production of the certificate by pltf. was not a condition precedent to his right to sue, & the action must be remitted to the county ct. for further hearing.

1140. Colliers working in "hard or difficult places."]—By the rules regulating the management of a colliery the minimum standard of wages for colliers working in hard or difficult places was fixed at 6*s.* a day. Pltfs., who were colliers engaged at the particular colliery, had worked at a place in the mine which was a hard or difficult one within the meaning of the rules. In an action by pltfs. to recover their wages, the county ct. judge awarded them the difference between what they actually earned & what they would have earned if the place had been a normal one, & he fixed the latter sum at 5*s.* per day:—Held: the County Ct. judge was wrong, & pltfs. were entitled to be paid at the rate of 6*s.* per day.—JONES v. PHŒNIX COLLIERY CO. 1143. Powers of joint district board—General district rules—Inclusion of method for ascertaining rate of actual daily earnings—Validity.]—The purposes for which a joint district board are empowered under Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 2), to make general district rules do not include the provision of a method for ascertaining the rate of the actual daily earnings of the workmen. Therefore, a rule which provided that "in ascertaining whether the minimum wage has been earned by any workman on piece work the total earnings during two consecutive weeks shall be divided by the number of shifts & parts of shifts he has worked during such two weeks" was held to be ultra vires & void.

A joint district board made a rule that if a workman from circumstances over which he alleged he had no control was unable to perform such an amount of work as would entitle him to a sum equal to the daily minimum rate he must forthwith give notice thereof to the official in charge of the district, & in default of such notice should forfeit his right to wages at the minimum rate for that pay:—Held: the rule was authorised by Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (c. 12), s. 1 (2).—DAVIES v. GLAMORGAN COAL CO., LTD., [1914] 1 K. By Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 38 (5), the information may be laid at any time within six months after abandonment, or after service on the owner of a notice to comply with the requirements of the sect. whichever last happens. On Jan. 25, 1900, after the abandonment, the appellant wrote to resp.: "I beg to point out to you that no plan of the abandoned workings in the seven feet coal seam has yet been forwarded, as required by Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 38. Will you please give the matter your early attention." On May 25 applt. again wrote, requiring resp. to comply with Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58). The information was laid on July 27, 1900. The justices dismissed the information:—Held: Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 38 (5), was a clause of limitation, the letter of Jan. 25 was a good notice, & six months after service of the notice having expired before proceedings were taken, the information was out of time, & the decision of the justices was right.

As to sect. 59 [of Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58)] the whole sect., or the second part of it, at any rate, applies only to a case where a person is guilty of an offence against the Act, for which a penalty is not provided. 1148. Liability of mine owner — Failure of manager to exercise daily supervision of mine.]—A colliery owner was summoned for having worked a mine without its being under the control of a duly certified manager. Proof was offered that the manager had lived at a distance from the mine & had only visited it at intervals. The justices dismissed the information on the ground that the owner was only bound under Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1872 (c. 76), s. 26, to appoint a duly certified manager & give notice thereof to the inspector of mines:—Held: the justices had been bound to hear the evidence, as, if the owner had acquiesced in the failure of the manager to exercise daily supervision in the mine, he would be liable to a penalty under the Act.—EVANS v. SMALL (1885), 2 T. Notice was given applts. by the district inspector of mines that an accumulation of water existed near to & in connection with their mining works, which was dangerous & tended to the bodily injury of the workmen employed therein, & requiring them "forthwith to remedy the matter." This accumulation of water was in the pit shaft of the adjoining colliery, & applts. had no power to interfere with the water in it, but it was shown that after the receipt of the notice they did not remove the men at work in their own pit shaft

A valve in this pipe, in the mine & near the pumping engine, blew off. The Board of Trade ordered that an inquiry should be held by two comrs. under Boiler Explosions Act, 1882 (c. 22), into the causes & circumstances attending the explosion. On an application for a prohibition to the comrs. so appointed to prohibit them from proceeding with the inquiry:—Held: (1) the repeal by Boiler Explosions Act, 1890 (c. 35), s. 2, of part of Boiler Explosions Act, 1882 (c. 22), s. 4, gave the Board of Trade jurisdiction to order such an inquiry; (2) the pipe in which the explosion occurred was a "boiler" within the interpretation clause of Boiler Explosions Act, 1882 (c. 22).—R. v. BOILER EXPLOSIONS ACT, 1882, COMRS., [1891] 1 Q. 1153. Owner or agent—Meaning of "owner"—Lessee of abandoned mine.]—In 1860 applt. proposed in writing to take from the landlord certain coal mines for fourteen years, from Michaelmas of that year, at a certain rent, a lease to be granted & accepted with provisions contained in a then existing lease of other mines. The landlord accepted this proposal in writing, but no lease was executed. One of the provisions mentioned was, that when & so soon as the pits, shafts, roads, etc., should be discontinued or become useless, the lessee would fill up or remove the same, unless the lessor should signify his wish that same should be kept open or continued. In 1871 applt. discontinued working these mines. In Dec. 1875, he was convicted by justices under the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1872 (c. 70), s. 41, upon a charge of not causing the tops of the shafts of those mines to be kept securely fenced for the prevention of accidents on Nov. 29 previously:—Held: upon a case stated applt. was not at the date charged an owner of the shafts within the interpretation of that term in sect. 72.—STOTT v. DICKINSON (1876), 34 L. The justices held the objection good, & dismissed the complaint:—Held: the objection being untenable, & being a preliminary one in the nature of a plea in abatement, the justices had declined jurisdiction, & therefore this ct. made a rule absolute, calling on them to hear & adjudicate upon the case, under Justices Protection Act, 1847 (c. 44), s. 5.—R. v. BROWN (1857), 7 E. & B. 757; 26 L. 1155. —— —— Colliery company & manager.]—Two informations were laid against a colliery co. under the Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), one of which charged that they had failed to see that a certain mine belonging to them was provided with sufficient refuge holes contrary to s. 44 (1) of the Act; & the other of which charged that they had failed to see that sufficient bore holes were kept in the mine contrary to s. 68 of the Act. Two separate informations were also laid against the co.'s manager, who was one of their directors, charging him with the same offences. The four informations were heard together by the justices, & at the hearing the manager admitted full responsibility, but the co. did not prove the facts necessary to exempt them from liability under either the latter part of s. 75 or s. 102, of the Act. The justices found that the alleged contraventions of the Act had taken place, & therefore that under s. 75 & s. 101 (2) offences had been committed against the Act, & they did not find that the offences were trivial or committed in extenuating circumstances. The justices convicted the manager on the separate informations against him & imposed upon him a penalty & costs; but, considering that penalty adequate, & having regard to the fact that the manager took all responsibility, they dismissed the informations against the co. On a case stated by the justices:—Held: the justices should have convicted the co. as well as the manager, & that the case must go back to them with a direction to do so.—WING v. DENT MAIN COLLIERY CO., LTD., [1924] 2 K. 1156. —— Certificated manager in charge.]—The Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1872 (c. 76), s. 51, after providing general rules to be observed in every mine to which the Act applies, enacts that in the event of any contravention of, or non-compliance with, any of the general rules by any person whomsoever being proved, the owner, agent, & manager shall each be guilty of an offence against the Act, unless he proves that he had taken all reasonable means by publishing, & to the best of his power enforcing, the said rules as regulations for the working of the mine to prevent such contravention or non-compliance. An information was preferred under this sect. against the part owner of a coal mine, in which one of the general rules regulating the employment of machines had not been complied with. The evidence was that the general rules were put up in various parts of the mine, & that deft. occasionally visited the mine, but resided at a distance, & took no part in the management, which was under the exclusive control of the certified manager, who was also part owner. Deft. was not examined as a witness, as he might have been under s. 63 (4), but it was admitted that he had not personally taken any means to enforce the rules. The justices found as a fact that deft. had taken all reasonable means by publishing, & to the best of his power enforcing, the rules as regulations for the working of the mine to prevent such non-compliance, & dismissed the information:—Held: there was evidence from which the justices might properly come to that conclusion.—BAKER v. CARTER (1878), 3 Ex. 1159. —— —— Mine under control of certificated manager & under-manager.]—Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), after providing by s. 49 general rules to be observed in mines, enacts by s. 50, that, in the event of any contravention or of non-compliance with the rules in the case of any mine to which the Act applies by any person whomsoever, the owner, agent, & manager shall each be guilty of an offence against the Act, unless he proves that he had taken all reasonable means, by publishing, & to the best of his power enforcing, the rules as regulations for the working of the mine, to prevent such contravention or non-compliance. An information was preferred under s. 49, against the agents of a coal mine, in which one of the general rules relating to the ventilation of the mine had not been complied with. Deft. had appointed a duly qualified manager & under manager, & the non-compliance with the rules, which affected only one heading of the mine & was of a temporary character was due to their negligence. There was no evidence of personal negligence by deft., & deft. was not called as a witness. The justices found that deft. had taken the proper steps to enforce the rules by appointing a duly qualified manager & under manager, whose duty it was to carry out the rules, & that the violation of the rules was in no way caused by deft. omitting to enforce the rules, & they dismissed the information:—Held: there was evidence from which the justices might properly come to that conclusion.—STOKES v. MITCHESON, [1902] 1 K. 1161. —— —— ——.]—A limited co. were the owners of a coal mine of which resp. was the managing director; but resp. did not interfere with the actual management of the mine underground, which was left in the hands of a duly certificated manager, under the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), who was the manager of the colliery, & was in charge thereof. Resp., as managing director, occasionally visited the mine, but he had in no way interfered with the manager in his duties, though he had authorised all necessary expenditure for the safety & conduct of the mine, & had duly published at the mine the rules under the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), & the abstract of the Act itself. An offence having been committed by the use of naked lights in the mine on a day when resp. was not at the mine:—Held: (1) resp. as managing director, was "agent," of the mine within the meaning of the Act, & was legally responsible as such; but (2) he had, by publishing & to the best of his power enforcing the rules as regulations for the working of the mine, taken all reasonable means within s. 50 of the Act to prevent such contravention of the rules, & was therefore not liable to be convicted for the offence.—STOKES v. CHECKLAND (1893), 68 L. 1162. —— What amounts to taking part in management of mine—Question of fact.]—Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), s. 102 (1), is intended to afford an additional protection to that given by s. 75 to the owner or agent of a mine. If they have not been "in the habit of taking" part in the management of the mine, & have not taken part in its management in regard to the particular matter in question, protection is not limited to the case under s. 75 which makes exemption depend on having taken means to prevent contravention of, or non-compliance with, the provisions of Part II. of the Act. The question of the habit of management in the particular instance is one of fact for the justices. Informations were preferred respectively against the fireman of a mine for having failed to inspect the mine immediately before the commencement of work conformably with s. 64 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), & against the agent & owners for failing to enforce the regulations providing for such inspection in accordance with ss. 64 & 75 of the Act. The justices convicted the fireman of an offence under s. 64, but dismissed the informations against 1163. —— —— Owners consulted by manager as to best means of satisfying statutory requirements.]—The owners of a mine to which Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1911 (c. 50), s. 31 (3), applied instructed their manager to apply to the inspector of the division for an extension of time in which to comply with the requirements of that sect., & the inspector allowed the extension. The manager consulted the owners as to the scheme to be adopted for the purpose of satisfying those requirements. Save as aforesaid the owners took no part in the management of the mine. On the expiry of the time as so extended the scheme which had been adopted was uncompleted, & the mine was still without adequate means for reversing the air current. The owners having been summoned under s. 101 (2):—Held: they had taken part in the management of the mine in respect of the matters in question & could not claim the protection of s. 102 (1), & were consequently guilty of the offence charged.—ATKINSON v. LEWIS MERTHYR CONSOLIDATED COLLIERIES, LTD., [1916] 1 K. 1164. —— Whether liability absolute—Negligence of competent employee.]—By the Mines Regulation Act, 1860 (c. 151), s. 10, it was provided that certain general rules should be observed in every coal mine by the owner & agent thereof; & among those rules was one providing that, whenever safety lamps were required to be used, they should be first examined & safely locked by a person or persons duly authorised for that purpose. Sect. 22 of the Act imposed a penalty on the owner or agent if, through the default of such owner or agent, any of the general rules, the provisions of which ought to be observed by them, were neglected or wilfully violated. The owner of a mine appointed a competent person to examine & lock the safety lamps required for use in the mine, but such person delivered out certain safety lamps to miners for use in the mine unlocked:—Held: in the absence of any personal default on the part of the owner, he was not liable to a penalty in respect of the act of the person so employed by him.—DICKENSON v. FLETCHER (1873), L. 1166. —— —— Failure to appoint competent officials.]—The husband of pursuer was killed by an outbreak of poisonous gas while working in the employment of defenders, a limited co., in a coal mine of which they were owners. In an action for damages at common law & alternatively under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42), the sheriff-substitute found that defenders were liable inasmuch as they had failed to appoint officials competent for the working of the mine, & he assessed the damages at £400. On appeal the ct. of sessions held that defenders were not liable at common law, having used reasonable care in appointing managers of the necessary qualifications & experience; that although there had been a breach of the special rules applicable to the mine under Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 49, these rules prescribed the duties of the managers & firemen & imposed no duties directly on the owners of the mine; but that defenders were liable under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (c. 42), in respect of the negligence of their servants & their failure to comply with the rules in question, & the ct. awarded as damages £282:—Held: there was a duty on defenders as owners of the mine to appoint & keep in charge persons competent to deal with the dangers arising in the mine; they had not discharged this duty, & were therefore liable at common law for the sum awarded by the sheriff-substitute.—BUTLER (OR BLACK) v. FIFE COAL CO., LTD., [1912] A. 1167. —— Burden of proof of non-liability.]—The agent of a coal mine was summoned under Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), ss. 49 (r. 1), 50, for not causing an adequate amount of ventilation to be constantly produced in the mine. The mine was a "fiery" one, & exceptional care as to ventilation was required.

A manager & an undermanager had been duly appointed, & the general rules contained in Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 49, had been duly published. It was proved that on Sept. 19, 1907, in consequence of the want of ventilation, the stythe & fire damp had not been diluted & rendered harmless so as to cause the parts where men were working & passing to be in a fit state for such purposes. There was no direct evidence of what the cause of the want of adequate ventilation was, except at one place where a brattice was defective, which brattice had been badly put up, & in consequence it did not cause the air to go to the working face of the coal there. For some seven or eight months prior to Sept. 19, 1907, the manager had from ill health been unable to discharge his duties as manager & to go down the mine. In consequence of the manager's illness, the agent had been conferring up to the previous July two or three times a week with the undermanager, & from that July, twice a week with a man engaged as assistant to the manager, but he did not peruse the overmen's daily reports, & he had not been down the mine between the previous July 3 & Sept. 19. It was admitted that the deputy overmen's reports to the undermanager for Sept. 19 stated that the ventilation was good, & that it was the duty of the overmen to see to the putting up of brattices. The justices found as a fact that in view of all the circumstances, & in particular having regard to the fact of the abnormal dangers attending the working of this mine & of the inability of the manager to go down the mine to overlook, the agent had not taken all reasonable means by enforcing to the best of his power Coal Mine's Regulation Act, 1877 (c. 58), s. 49 (r. 1), as a regulation for the working of the mine to prevent non-compliance therewith:—Held: the onus of proof being cast on the agent by Coal Mine's Regulation Act, 1877 (c. 58), s. 50, there was evidence which justified the justices in coming to the conclusion that the agent had not discharged the onus cast upon him.—ANDERSON v. ATKINSON (1908), 99 L. 1168. —— ——.]—An explosion in a mine was caused by a blasting operation conducted in breach of the rules of the Coal Mines Regulation Acts.

In an action against the mine owners to recover damages for injury to a miner by the explosion the judge held that the burden of proving that the owners had neglected their duty to enforce the statutory rules lay on pltf., &, as the pltf. had failed to produce evidence on that point, defts. obtained a verdict & judgment:—Held: upon the question whether the mine authorities had done their duty in taking proper care of the safety of the miners the burden of proof did not lie upon pltf.—BRITANNIC MERTHYR COAL CO., LTD. v. DAVID, [1910] A. 1169. ——— ——— What must be proved.]—Informations were preferred against the agent of a coal mine, & against the co. that owned the colliery for an offence under Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), s. 41 (2), in respect of a defective airway, & by consent were heard together. The agent proved that as soon as the defect in the airway was pointed out to him by the manager of the mine, he at once informed the co., who agreed to proceed immediately with the driving of a new airway. The justices convicted the co. & acquitted the agent:—Held: the justices were wrong in acquitting the agent, as he had not satisfied the burden imposed on him by Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), s. 102, of proving (a) that he was not in the habit of taking & did not in respect of the matters in question take any part in the management of the mine; (b that he had made all the financial & other provisions necessary to enable the manager to carry out his duties; & (c) that the offence was committed without his knowledge, consent or connivance. 1170. —— Civil & criminal liability.]—(1) Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 49, creates a statutory duty in the owner of a coal mine to observe, not some only, but all of the rules therein contained; & this is a statutory duty in the owner personally for the benefit of the workmen & not only in those employed by the owner in the working of the coal mine.

(2) Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c. 58), s. 50, creates in the owner of a coal mine not a criminal liability only, with the result that he is rendered liable to a penalty, but also it extends to create in him liability in a civil action.

1174. Provision of ventilation—Must be continuous—Suspension of actual work during week-end.]—18 & 19 Vict. c. 108. s. 4, requires certain rules to be observed, in every coal mine & colliery, by the owner & agent thereof. By rule 1, "an adequate amount of ventilation" is to "be constantly produced at all collieries" in order "that the working places of the pits & levels of such collieries" may "under ordinary circumstances be in a fit state for working." Sect. 11 imposes a penalty upon the owner & agent "if" "any" "colliery be worked," & the aforesaid rules are neglected or wilfully violated:—Held: the agent of a colliery which was actually worked only on week days, incurred a penalty under sect. 11 for a breach of rule 1, by neglecting to keep up adequate ventilation in the colliery during the suspension of actual work there between Saturday night & Monday morning; for, notwithstanding such suspension, the colliery was "worked" during that time within the meaning of that sect.—KNOWLES v. DICKINSON (1860), 2 E. & E. 705; 29 L. 1175. ——Duty of management—According to resources available.]—By Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1872 (c. 76), s. 51, it is provided that, in the event of any contravention of the general rules set out in that sect., the owner, agent, & manager shall be each guilty of an offence, unless he proves that he has taken all reasonable means to prevent such contravention. The first of all such general rules provide that an adequate amount of ventilation shall be constantly produced in every mine to render harmless noxious gases, so that the working places of the shaft of such mine, & the travelling roads to & from such working places, shall be in a fit state for working & passing therein. Resp., who was a certified manager of a colliery mine, at a salary of £1 per week, was charged with an offence under sect. 51, r. 1. It was proved the mine was improperly ventilated, & resp. might have improved the ventilation with the resources at his disposal, but the requisite provision for the proper ventilation of the mine would have involved an outlay of £200:—Held: the finding of the justices, that resp. had omitted to employ the resources at his disposal for the improvement of the ventilation of the mine, disclosed an offence under sect. 51, for which he was liable to be convicted.—HALL v. HOPWOOD (1879), 49 L. Where by a fall in the roof in a level a cavity was formed, & to repair it timbering was used which prevented the air current reaching it & sufficiently diluting inflammable & noxious gases, the manager was held responsible for not producing adequate & constant ventilation in accordance with sect. 29, although work was not at the time being carried on in the mine.

1177. Extent of ventilation—So much of mine as will render workings & travelling roads safe.]—By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 151, s. 10, r. 1, of the general rules to be observed in every colliery or coal mine & ironstone mine, by the owner or agent thereof, "an adequate amount of ventilation shall be constantly produced in all coal mines, etc., to dilute & render harmless noxious gases to such an extent that the working places & the travelling roads to or from such working places shall, under ordinary circumstances, be in a fit state for working & passing therein":—Held: it was not sufficient compliance with this rule to cause ventilation to pass along the working places & travelling roads, but so much of the mine must be kept so ventilated as to render the working places & travelling roads safe.—BROUGH v. HOMFRAY (1868), L. 1185. Walking on haulage road while haulage in motion—Provision as to gradient—Not applicable to road as a whole.]—Men working in a colliery on the morning of Dec. 13, 1921, were knocked off work by the stallman & came down the "jig" to the "jig" bottom, & walked along to the main haulage road, & congregated about the bottom of the incline, & the haulage cable was still working at the rate of two & a half miles an hour, although the signal to stop it for the end of the night shift was almost due, & some loaded tubs which were being hauled up the incline broke loose & crashed into the group of men, killing two & injuring others, & one of the injured men & the widow of a man who had been killed claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c. 58):—Held: although the haulage road was very steep in parts, yet as the gradient where the men standing when the accident occurred was, for about thirty yards from the bottom of the incline, only one in fifteen, the men were not there in breach of Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), s. 43 (1), & appcts. were entitled to compensation.—RUCK v. STOCKINGFORD COLLIERY CO., LTD., MOORE v. STOCKINGFORD COLLIERY CO., LTD. 1186. —— Provision as to safety space of two feet—Applies to whole length of track.]—Appct., a boy of eighteen, was employed as a miner in resp.'s colliery. On Apr. 29, 1922, after working on a night shift, he was walking along a haulage road while the haulage rope was in motion. He slipped & fell, & his ankle was caught between the haulage rope & the wall, & he was injured. The employers denied liability on the ground that they had forbidden workmen to use that road, & that appct. had acted contrary to Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), s. 43 (1), which prohibits workmen from walking along a haulage road while the haulage rope is in motion except "(a) where there is provided on one side of the road a clear space of at least two feet in width between the tubs & that side of the road. . . ." The county ct. judge found that the employers had not enforced the prohibition, that there was not a clear space of two feet between the haulage rope & the side of the road along the whole length of the haulage road, though there was such a space where the accident occurred, that appct. must be deemed to know the law & had acted in breach of the statutory prohibition, & was not, therefore, entitled to compensation as the accident did not arise out of the employment:—Held: the requirement as to space applied to the whole length of the haulage road, the award must be upheld on the true construction of the statutory regulations, & there was no misdirection.—HAWKRIDGE v. HOWDEN CLOUGH COLLIERIES CO., LTD. 1187. Liability of workmen riding on tub—Colliery prohibition not strictly enforced.]—A workman, employed as a "repairer" in a colliery, met with an accident while riding on a tub conveying timber for the purposes of his work. It was part of his duty to detach the tub at the end of its journey from the haulage rope, but the county ct. judge found that the purpose for which he rode on the tub was to hold the timber in position. There was evidence that the employers had prohibited any riding on tubs, but such prohibition had not been strictly enforced. Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), s. 43 (2), prohibited riding on tubs unless for the purpose of detaching or attaching tubs. The county ct. judge held that the statutory prohibition applied, & that the workman not being a "rider," he had not discharged the onus of showing that he came within the scope of the exception contained in Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), s. 43 (2) (a):—Held: (1) since it was part of the workman's ordinary duty as a repairer to detach & attach tubs, the exception contained in Coal Mines Act, 1911 (c. 50), s. 43 (2), applied, & thus there was no statutory prohibition; (2) the employers were not entitled to rely on the colliery prohibition against riding because such prohibition had not been strictly enforced. The workman was therefore entitled to an award.—WILLIAMS v. CLEEVES WESTERN VALLEYS ANTHRACITE COLLIERIES, LTD. (1924), 131 L. T. 231; 17 B. W. C. C. 97, C. A.

1206. Interpretation of rules.]—By 35 & 36 Vict. c. 76, s. 52, power is given to frame special rules for the conduct & guidance of the persons acting in the management of a coal mine or employed in or about the same. By a special rule in force in the H. mine no person "employed in or about the works" was to ascend the pit contrary to the direction of the hooker-on. In the H. mine the workmen had power to dismiss themselves at a moment's notice. Resps. were workmen employed in the H. mine, & being dissatisfied with their working place discharged themselves. They asked the hooker-on to allow them to ascend the pit, but he refused to do so until the ordinary time came for workmen to quit the mine; resps. however ascended contrary to his direction:—Held: resps. had been guilty of a breach of the special rule above-mentioned.

It is a principle to be observed as to the interpretation of statutes that where a strictly literal construction leads to a manifest absurdity, a construction may be adopted which will carry out what may be reasonably supposed to have been the intention of the legislature (GROVE, J.).—HIGHAM v. WRIGHT (1877), 2 C. P. D. 397; 46 L. J. M. C. 223; 37 L. T. 187; 41 J. P. 679, D. C.

1207. Liability of workmen for breach—Delivery of copy of rules—As condition precedent to conviction.]—It is enacted by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 151, s. 11, that special rules shall be established in every mine within the Act, & by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 151, s. 22, a penalty is imposed upon workpeople employed in such mines who neglect or wilfully violate any of such special rules. By rule 11 of the special rules in force in the present case, every chartermaster, underlooker, manager, or other person, upon employing any workman, was to deliver to him a copy of such rules; & by rule 34 it was provided that "every workman is engaged subject to these rules, & shall observe the same & abide by the consequences of neglecting them, & shall receive a copy thereof from the manager, chartermaster, or other person who may engage him." Upon an information under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 151, s. 22, against applt. for disobeying the orders of resp., who was the chartermaster under whose control applt. was, contrary to the rules, there was no evidence that a copy of the said rules had been given to applt.; & it was contended that the delivery of a copy of such rules was a condition precedent to resp.'s right to enforce them. The justices having convicted applt.:—Held: they were warranted by law in so doing.—HIGGINSON v. HAPLEY (1869), 19 L. T. 690; 33 J. P. 598.

1208. —— Implied acquiescence of manager—Acquiescence in breach by another person.]—A special rule of a coal mine provided that the engine-tender shall not allow any person to be in the enginehouse for any purpose, & shall not leave his engine in charge of any other person without authority of the manager, & shall be in attendance during the whole time that any person belonging to the shift on which he is working is below ground in the mine. H., the engineman, was in charge, & a boy, who oiled the boilers outside was inside with leave of the manager, & such boy was caught by the flywheel of the engine & killed:—Held: H. was properly convicted for neglecting to observe the special rule, & it was no defence that the manager allowed another person to be inside the house.—HAYWOOD v. BAKER (1876), 41 J. P. 533, D. C.

1209. —— Breach after voluntary discharge from employment—At moment's notice.]—HIGHAM v. WRIGHT, No. 1206, ante.

1210. —— Disobedience to lawful commands of manager enforcing rules.]—A number of trammers in a mine, whose duty was to convey tubs when filled with coal to the "straight road," & bring back the empty tubs, their pay varying with the number of tubs conveyed by them, after being at work for some hours stopped work, & asked to be drawn out of the mine. They were ordered by the undermanager to return to work, but they refused to do so, saying that they had not a sufficiency of tubs, & owing to their stopping work certain miners were also compelled to leave work. One of the trammers having been summoned under one of the special rules & convicted:—Held: the conviction under the special rule was right.—COLBECK v. WHITWHAM (1912), 107 L. T. 22; 76 J. The lessees ceased working the mine, & left & allowed it to remain insufficiently fenced:—Held: although the lease was still in force & undetermined, resps. were guilty of an offence under Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872 (c. 77), s. 13, as "persons interested in the minerals of the mine."—EVANS v. MOSTYN (LADY) (1877), 2 C. By the last clause of sect. 23 every person who contravenes or does not comply with any of the general rules in this sect. shall be guilty of an offence against this Act. By sect. 31, every person employed in or about a mine, other than an owner or agent, who is guilty of any act or omission which, in the case of an owner or agent, would be an offence against this Act shall be guilty of an offence against this Act, & is rendered liable to a penalty.

S. & others were working miners in the D. mine. The D. mine had two shafts, in one of which was a man engine, with a proper cover, used to lower miners from & raise them to the surface of the mine. In the other was a "skip" or open box, without a cover, used for raising ores & refuse. The men employed in the mine were drawn up the shaft in a bucket unprovided with guides:—Held: the shaft was a "working shaft" within Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872 (c. 77), s. 23 (10), & therefore the owners of the mine were liable to be convicted of an offence against that sect.—FOSTER v. NORTH HENDRE MINING CO., LTD., [1891] 1 Q. The excavation being a source of danger & obstruction to persons using the road, the excavator, to protect them & the road, built alongside the road a wall, the bottom of which rested on a ledge of limestone left ungotten for the purpose & served as a retaining wall for the subsoil of the road & as a fence wall above its surface. 1236. Rights of Crown.]—The King has not the pre-emption of tin in Cornwall by any prerogative; but as an ancient right & inheritance due to him as well of tin in the land of the subject as in his proper demesnes, etc.—STANNARIES' CASE (1606), 12 Co. Rep. 9; 77 E. R. 1292.

1237. Ownership of tin mines—In owner of soil.]—(1) Declaration, in case, stated that pltf. was possessed of & entitled to a tenement to wit the right to dig & take to his own use, tin & tin ore in certain lands; & alleged a disturbance by deft. Plea, denying the possession & title modo et formâ. At the trial, pltf. claimed under the following custom which the jury found to exist in fact; any person may enter on the waste land of another in Cornwall & mark out by four corner boundaries a certain area; a written description of the plot of land so marked with metes & bounds & the name of the person for whose use the proceeding is taken is recorded in an immemorial local ct. called the Stannary Ct., & proclaimed at three successive cts. held at stated intervals; if no objection is successfully made by any other person, the ct. awards a writ to the bailiff of the ct. to deliver possession of the said "bounds or tin works" to the bounder who thereupon has the exclusive right to search for, dig & take for his own use all tin & tin ore within the described limits, paying to the landowner a certain customary proportion of the ore raised under the name of toll tin. The right descends to exors. & may be preserved for an indefinite time, either by actually working & paying toll, or by annually renewing the four boundary marks on a certain day:—Held: the custom to preserve the right by the mere ceremony of an annual renewal without working is unreasonable & bad in law, & pltf., who had ceased to work or pay toll for eighteen years, could not recover in the above action, even as against a stranger; &, although the alleged custom involved a claim of a profit in alieno solo it would have been a good one; if bonâ fide working had been found to be obligatory under it.

(2) Nothing has been alleged in the present case to bring this mine within the description of a Royal Mine; & we think it would be wrong to encourage the slightest doubt that, apart from all question of bounding, the ownership of a tin or copper mine in Cornwall is in the owner of the freehold of the soil, ratione soli, by the common law of England, applicable to it as to any other mineral district in any other part of England. Upon this ownership, however, the custom of bounding has been engrafted; &, up to the extent to which both sides are agreed to admit it in fact, there can be no doubt that it is most reasonable,

PART XV. SECT. 2.

1231 i. Liability at common law—As against neighbours & persons lawfully upon the premises.]—Pltf. was owner & occupier of the surface of certain lands on which there was an unfenced quarry, the mining rights in which were leased to the predecessor in title of defts. These rights passed by will to defts., who paid the rent reserved by the lease, but did not work the mine, & left it in the unfenced condition in which they found it. One of pltf.'s bullocks fell into the quarry & was killed:—Held: pltf. was entitled to recover damages from defts. for the loss of his bullock, there being a continuing liability on the part of defts. to keep the quarry so as not to be a danger & a nuisance to their neighbour.—M'MORROW v. LAYDEN, [1919] 2 I. R. 398.—IR.

fulfilling every requisite of a good custom. In substance it is this: The mine is parcel of the soil; the ownership is in the owner of the soil; but it is a parcel which to discover & bring to the surface may ordinarily require capital, skill, enterprise & combination; which, while in the bowels of the earth, is wholly useless to the owner as well as to the public; & the bringing of which into the market is eminently for the benefit of the public. If, therefore, the owner of the soil cannot or will not do this for himself, he shall not be allowed to lock it up from the public; & therefore in such case, unless when by inclosure he may seem to have devoted the land to other important purposes inconsistent with mining operations, such as agriculture or building, any tinner, i.e. any man employing himself in tin mining, may secure to himself the right to dig the mines under the land, rendering a certain portion of the produce to the owner of the soil (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).

(3) It is well known that the stannary customs, as the name imports, were confined to tin only; copper mining is of comparatively modern introduction into Cornwall; it is now discovered that the two metals are frequently found within the limits of the same work; but we apprehend that it never has been contended that the bounder, merely as such, working a tin mine & extracting copper from it with the tin, has any right to the copper (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).

(4) Nothing we have said compels the bounder to strictly continuous working; such reasonable time for consideration, preparation, & due selection of places and planes, must always be allowed as the nature of the undertaking reasonably requires; &, when he has once bonâ fide worked, his ceasing to work for a time will be therefore open to explanation, so as to prevent a forfeiture (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).—ROGERS v. BRENTON (1847), 10 Q. 1257. Application of statutes & custom—Strictly construed.]—Pltfs. were the owners of land in the district of K. F. which land was contiguous to the district of the wapentake of W. These two districts, though distinct, & governed by different Acts of Parliament, form part of the High Peak of D. Defts. sunk a draft & commenced mining operations in pltfs.' land in the district of K. F. but subsequently extended them to the adjoining district of W. By the custom of the districts, the right to dig & search for lead ore is conceded to all persons, who may use a specified portion of the above-lying surface for the purpose of dressing the ore & placing the spoil or refuse, which spoil, when not used by the miners, becomes the property of the surface owner. Defts. having sunk a shaft originally in the land of pltfs., carried on their operations into another district & under the surface of another landowner, & claimed to use pltfs.' land for the purpose of dressing the ore, & for depositing the refuse got from under the surface in the other district, & belonging to the other landowner:—Held: as the two districts of K. F. & of W. were quite distinct & governed by separate Acts of Parliament, it was not competent for the miner sinking his shaft in one district to use the surface land in that district to dress the ore & place the spoil or refuse got from another district into which he had extended his operations.

The rights thus conferred on the miner are, as regards the landowner, of a very onerous character . . . & must in my opinion be construed strictly (COCKBURN, C.J.).—WAKE v. REDFEARN (1880), 43 L. T. 123; 44 J. P. 681.

1259. Right to work mines—Founded on custom & common to all subjects of realm.]—(1) If [the landowner] should himself desire to work any vein of lead within his own land, [he] had no greater or better right than that which was open under the custom to all the Queen's subjects; & if he worked the mines at all he could only do so upon the customary terms & on payment of the customary royalties (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

(2) When any new vein was found, the "first finder" was to have measured & set out to him, by the barmaster, in the presence of two grand jurors, "two meers in length of the vein," & a third "meer," it is not necessary to state its dimensions, was at the same time to be allotted to the Crown lessees, or, if there were none, to the Queen. If neither the Crown lessees nor the Queen chose to work this third "meer," the "first finder" was to be entitled either to purchase it from the Crown on certain terms, or to work through it, reserving the ore found there, less expenses, for the Crown (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

(3) Under the 4th [custom scheduled to High Peak Mining Customs & Mineral Courts Act, 1851 (c. xciv)] they [the miners] were to have set out for their use by the barmaster, without any compensation to the occupiers or landowner, ways from the mine to the nearest highway, & also to the nearest running stream, spring, or natural pond, such ways, & also the water of such stream, etc., to be used by them for mining purposes only. . . . Two more only of the scheduled customs require to be mentioned. The nineteenth provides that, if the barmaster "finds any mine or vein neglected & not wrought, & not hindered by water or for want of air," he may, "if required so to do by any person or persons," give notice that "the mine will be forfeited at the expiration of three weeks if not duly & reasonably worked to the satisfaction of the barmaster & grand jury, & no other sufficient reason assigned to them"; & that if at the expiration of that time, the mine or vein is not so worked, the barmaster may then 1264. —— Nature of miner's interest Ownership—With no right in perpetuity.]—(1) Miners working under customs established by High Peak Mining Customs & Minerals Courts Act, 1851 (c. xciv) lawfully erected machinery & buildings accessory thereto on surface land, of which the miners were entitled to the exclusive use for mining purposes, but the freehold of which belonged to others. The buildings were attached so as to be part of the soil, & so that they could not be removed without some disturbance, which would not amount to a destruction of the soil. The buildings were from the first intended to be accessory to the mining, & there was nothing to show that the property in them was intended to be irrevocably annexed to the soil: Held: the maxim "quicquid plantatur solo solo cedit," was not applicable, & the miners were entitled to pull down & remove the buildings while their interest in the mine continued, & were not liable to the surface owners for so doing.

(2) In the Act of 1851 [High Peak Mining Customs & Minerals Courts Act (c. 91)] & in the scheduled customs which are therewith incorporated & are therefore of statutory authority, the interest of the miner is expressly described & recognised as that of ownership. He has not an absolute right in perpetuity, but his right remains that of an owner until he gives up possession of the mine or is dispossessed by competent authority (LORD WATSON).

(3) I cannot doubt for a moment but that the custom would authorise the miner to use all modern appliances & that he was not confined to the use of such as existed at the time of the presumed grant of these mining rights (LORD FITZGERALD).—WAKE v. HALL (1883), 8 App. Cas. 195; 52 L. 1265. —— —— Effect of abandonment of working.]—By Metalliferous Mines Regulations Act, 1872 (c. 77), s. 13, the owner & person interested in the minerals of a mine shall fence an abandoned mine, but by sub-sect. 2 of same section, where the abandonment has occurred before the passing of the Act, it need only be done under certain conditions or on notice from an inspector, on the ground that it is specially dangerous.

Applt. was the lord of the manor of H. & freeholder of the soil of a mine, which had not been worked for over thirty years, & the workers of which or their representatives could not be traced. Notice was served on him to fence on the ground that the entrance was specially dangerous. By Derbyshire Mining Act, 1852, applt. was entitled to dues of lot & cope & a third meer, & this Act further only gave the worker the right to mine, & conferred no title on the soil. Applt. having failed to comply with the terms of the notice was summoned & convicted:—Held: applt. was a person interested in the minerals, & on abandonment the mine reverted to him as owner, &, therefore, being liable to fence, he was rightly convicted. —DEVONSHIRE (DUKE) v. STOKES (1897), 76 L. SUB-SECT. 1.—GALES.

1280. Meaning of gale.]—The word "gale" is used in many senses, sometimes as the grant itself of a right to mine, sometimes as the licence conferred by the grant, & more frequently as the corporeal property affected by the grant, having a site & capable of being defined by metes and bounds (KEKEWICH, J.).—GREAT WESTERN (FOREST OF DEAN) COLLIERIES CO., LTD. v. TRAFALGAR COLLIERY CO., LTD. 1282. —— Time for application—When gale empty.]—According to the Acts & rules regulating the working of mines in the Forest of Dean, a gale or lease is not forfeited by not being worked, unless & until the Crown claims the forfeiture. The Crown is under no obligation to claim the forfeiture. An application for a gale will not be valid, unless the gale is at the time empty. A gale is forfeited & becomes empty when notice that the Crown claims the forfeiture has been given to the galee, & an officer has been ordered to take possession, though possession is not immediately taken. The free miner who applies first after that notice has been given is entitled to the gale.—JAMES v. YOUNG (1884), 27 Ch. D. 652; 53 L. J. Ch. 793; 51 L. T. 75; 32 W. R. 981.

1283. — — Priority of application.]—In 1868, D., a free miner of the Forest of Dean, duly applied to have a particular gale granted to him, pursuant to Dean Forest (Mines) Act, 1838 (c. 43), s. 60. The gaveller acceded to his application, & issued a notice that a grant would be made to D. on a day named. Prior to this day rival claimants to the gale started up, & subsequently other claims were made. D. died before any grant was actually made to him. On a petition of right by the devisees of D., claiming the gale for which he had applied:—Held: (1) D. had acquired no transmissible interest in the gale, the grant not having been completed in his lifetime; (2) the heir or devisee of a free miner of the Forest of Dean had no locus standi to compel the gaveller to make a grant.—JAMES v. R. 1285. —— —— Effect of one being "exhausted" —Meaning of "exhausted."]—Where a free miner in the Forest of Dean has had three gales or allotments granted to him, & has surrendered one of such gales on the ground that there was not sufficient coal to make the gale worth working, he will be entitled to another gale equally as if the coal in one of the three gales had been exhausted within Dean Forest (Mines) Act, 1838 (c. 43), s. 61.—ELLWAY v. DAVIS (1873), L. 1286. —— —— ——.]—A free miner can, under Dean Forest (Mines) Act, 1838 (c. 43), s. 61, hold only three gales; but where a free miner has had three gales, & has surrendered one of them on the ground that it contained an insufficient amount of coal to be profitably worked, he having a right to surrender exhausted gales, the surrender is valid, & the free miner is no longer the holder of three gales, so that he can apply to have another gale granted to him.—JAMES v. R. 1288. —— Actual grant delayed by conflicting claims—Interest transmissible by will.]—A free miner of the Forest of Dean applied for an unoccupied gale. The gaveller acceded to the application, duly entered it in his book, & gave notice of his intention to make the grant upon a certain day. Conflicting claims being set up, the actual grant of the gale was delayed, &, in the meantime, the free miner died. The devisees under his will then presented their petition of right praying that the gale might be granted to them in right of their testator:—Held: Dean Forest (Mines) Act, 1838 (c. 43), s. 38, applied only to the state of things at the passing of the Act, & the free miner had acquired a title transmissible by will.—

By sect. 29 compliance with the rules may be enforced " by or on behalf of Her Majesty, her heirs or successors, or by any other person or persons, by injunction of Her Majesty's Ct. of Exch. or otherwise, in such manner as the said ct. shall, on application, think fit." Pltfs. brought an action for damages against defts., as owners of adjoining gales in the Forest of Dean, for injury sustained by pltfs. through the stopping of the engines in defts.' gale contrary to one of the rules. Some of defts. were mtgors. in possession of & working the gale. The other defts. were mtgees. who had never been in possession of or worked it : —Held : (1) with respect to defts. who were mtgors., the specific remedy given by sect. 29, for enforcing compliance with the rules, did not exclude pltfs.' right to recover damages for injuries caused to them by an antecedent breach of the rules ; (2) the mtgees. were not liable in the action.—BRAIN v. THOMAS (1881), 50 L. 1292. Rights of owners of inclosed land—Compensation for subsidence of surface—Jurisdiction of deputy gaveller.]—By Dean Forest (Mines) Act, 1838 (c. 43), s. 68, it is enacted that every free miner & other person who is or may be entitled to any gale, pit, level or work within any enclosed land of the Hundred of St. Briavels, shall be, & he is hereby required to pay to the owners of any such enclosed lands full & fair compensation for any surface damage by the opening or sinking of any gale, pit, level or work therein or thereon, which compensation shall be ascertained by the gaveller or deputy gaveller. Pltf. being the owner of a house standing on an open common within the Hundred, but adjoining on one side a yard of pltf. enclosed by a wall, deft., a free miner, in working his gale, got the coal from under the house, in consequence of which a subsidence took place, the foundation of the house sank & the walls cracked :—Held : (1) deft. was liable to an action for causing a subsidence of the surface ; but (2) the damage so done to pltf.'s house was not "surface damage" within sect. 68, & (3) the deputy gaveller had no jurisdiction to award compensation.—ALLAWAY v. WAGSTAFF (1859), 4 H. & N. 681 ; 29 L. 1293. —— Relief by court—Limitation of time.] —The gaveller of the Forest of Dean granted a gale or colliery to J. B., a free miner, he paying for all coal brought out 2*d.* per ton, & so working the colliery as to gain 24,000 tons a year : Provided that if the coal gotten should not amount to that quantity, a minimum rent of £200 should be paid : Provided also, & the grant was made upon the further condition, that the gale should be worked in manner therein mentioned. The gale not being worked, the galee paid the minimum rent for several years ; but upon arrears of rent becoming due, the gaveller declared the gale forfeited, & entered into possession thereof. Ten months after the declaration of forfeiture the galee tendered the arrears of rent, which were refused :—Held : (1) The grant was properly made upon conditions, one of which was the payment of rent ; (2) upon breach of that condition by non-payment there had been a legal forfeiture & a right of the Crown to re-enter ; & (3) the arrears not having been tendered, nor any proceedings taken within six months, there was no power in the ct. to relieve against the forfeiture.—Re BRAIN (1874), L. 1296. Rights of Crown.]— (1) Comrs. appointed under an Act of Parliament, to set out the metes & bounds of mines & quarries in the Forest of Dean, & to fix the rent to be paid for same :—Held : under the terms of the Act, to have no power to compel a miner to pay, in money, for by-gone workings, or to exclude him from the award if he refused to make such payment.

The right to relief in respect of past working of the mine, allowing the award to stand, is purely a legal question ; but it is a question in which perhaps the aid of this ct. is necessary as to the account which may be taken (WIGRAM V.-C.).

(2) Comrs. appointed by an Act of Parliament to determine the respective rights of the Crown & the customary miners on Crown lands, had made an award, giving a benefit to a miner, but had required such miner to submit to terms which they had no power to impose, & which the miner did not afterwards fulfil:—Held: after the time limited by the Act for making the award had expired, ct. would not set aside the award at the suit of the Crown, as it could not then restore the miner to his rights under the Act.

It seems, I think, clear that the recognised right of the Crown was . . . to take a fifth share of the produce of the mines. It does not, however, appear to have been customary for the Crown to exercise this strict right, but the right of the Crown was usually satisfied by some composition agreed upon between the officers of the Crown & the miner, & this composition appears in some cases to have been almost nominal (WIGRAM, V.-C.).—A.-G. v. JACKSON (1846), 5 Hare, 355; 67 E. 1297. —— Duty of forester to account.]—Defts. claimed, as woodwards or foresters of the Crown, a right to grant to certain free miners gales or licences for working stone quarries in uninclosed lands, part of the Forest of Dean, the soil whereof was in the Crown, to exact gale fees or rents in respect thereof, & to apply same to their own use without accounting to the Crown:—Held: (1) independently of the considerations that the alleged right, had it existed, would have been extinguished by Dean Forest Mines Act, 1838 (c. 43), & the evidence failed to establish the exercise of any such right in point of fact, no such right could exist in point of law; for, with regard to the free miners it was a claim to subvert the soil & carry away the substratum without stint or limit, which could not be established (a) by custom, for it was a profit à prendre, which cannot be claimed in alieno solo; nor (b) by prescription, for prescription to be good must be both reasonable & certain, & this was neither; nor (c) by presuming a lost grant for prescription presupposes a grant, & if such a grant cannot be presumed before, à fortiori it cannot after the period of legal memory; & a claim which cannot lawfully be made upon one of these foundations cannot be substantiated by a user, however long, & is not saved by any statute of limitations; (2) with regard to defts. besides the foregoing objections, they could not show a valid prescription exempting them, as officers of the Crown, from accounting for the proceeds of the Crown's soil which they had sold.—A.-G. v. MATHIAS (1858), 4 K. & J. 579; 27 L.
